NEWSPAPER

LEADING A COMMUNITY INTO THE FUTURE

An aging downtown, gradually decaying, with no cohesive effort to revive it.

That's what the Poughkeepsie (N.Y.) Journal saw in its community – and then addressed.

First, the Journal sought views of Poughkeepsie's people. Surveys, one-on-one interviews, focus groups and reader call-ins provided ideas to help shape a report on reviving the city.

Next, the newspaper asked an urban planner from nearby Pace University to use those ideas to create proposals for a new downtown to serve as the center of a countywide economic rebirth.

Then, the Journal produced a 12-page special section, "A vision for downtown." That section included an editorial setting forth a strong, specific agenda to revitalize downtown.

"A vision for downtown" explained the problem, proposed solutions, anticipated change and showed residents how they could direct that change.

All of that adds up to providing outstanding community leadership – a key goal of NEWS 2000, Gannett's program focusing on the changing needs of readers.

The Gulf War veterans no longer wear desert camouflage, but if it weren't for Dave Parks, they might still be invisible.

In fall 1992, when scattered reports of mysterious ailments afflicting Gulf War veterans began to emerge, Dave Parks decided to check on the situation in Alabama. In the back rooms of a local American Legion Post, The Birmingham News assistant state editor heard stories of family and work lives disrupted by poor health. Stories about the frustration of joblessness and the shame of bankruptcy.

As the number of reports rose, the scope of the investigation broadened to raise questions about the military and the response from the Department of Veterans' Affairs. Only recently, the veterans cast aside their promise of silence and went public with their most provocative suspicion: That they are victims of chemical weapons that their government is refusing to acknowledge.

Dave Parks took the lead on this story, which now is compared to Vietnam's Agent Orange controversy. But the veterans' plight is no longer being ignored. Senate hearings have been held and policies changed. And a few vets have found treatment that has improved their health, the outcome Parks hoped for at the American Legion hall.

About Awards

Livingston Awards. Three $5,000 prizes in local, national and international reporting have been presented by the Livingston Awards for Young Journalists, administered by the University of Michigan.

The winners, by category, were local reporting — Celia Dugger, the New York Times, for her series "Abuse Turns Fatal;" national reporting — Bert Robinson and Scott Thurm, the San Jose (Calif.) Mercury News, for their series "Showdown in the West: The Endangered Species Act;" and international reporting — Christiane Amanpour, Cable News Network, for her coverage of fighting in Sarajevo.

National Federation of Press Women Awards. Denis W. Law, vice president of Pacific Media Group of Redmond, Wash., which operates weekly and monthly newspapers, took first place in a national sweepstakes sponsored by the National Federation of Press Women.

Law won nine awards for his work at the Kirkand Courier and the Summamish Valley News, both in Washington.

Knight-Ridder Employee Awards. Knight-Ridder Inc. has announced winners of its seventh annual Employee Excellence Awards.

The John S. Knight Gold Medal, the top prize, went to San Jose (Calif.) Mercury News publisher Larry Jinks, who was cited for "promoting the core values of the company over a lifetime of achievement to journalistic excellence."

A special citation was presented to the staff of the Miami Herald for its performance in the aftermath of Hurricane Andrew.

Other newspaper winners were, by category, customer commitment — Lisa Goodman, Fort Wayne (Ind.) Newspapers; production — Dick Von Spreckelsen, the Beacon Journal, Akron, Ohio; entrepreneurial — Bekki Magyar Franklin, the Lexington (Ky.) Herald-Leader; community service — W. Davis "Buzz" Merritt Jr., the Wichita (Kan.) Eagle; financial — Victor Bubnow, the Miami Herald; advertising — Jill Tigner, the Ledger-Enquirer, Columbus, Ga.; circulation — Donald C. Hargis, the Herald-Leader; and news/editorial — Susan Watson, the Detroit Free Press.

Those recognized in the business information services classification were, by category, customer commitment — Ourania "Ronnie" Rohr, K-R Financial/Americas, New York; editorial — Hideko Morita, K-R Financial/Asia; marketing, sales or customer service — Emilio Tommasi, K-R Financial/Europe; and technical or communications — Paul Ames, K-R Financial.

The Byron B. Harless Award for Special Merit went to Marge McCollum, K-R organizational training director. Kimberly P. Wilson of K-R Financial/Americas was cited for administration/personnel.

Lincoln Steffens Journalism Competition. An investigative series on the cover-up of health risks of breast implants by Seth Rosenfeld in the San Francisco Examiner took the top prize in the 12th annual Lincoln Steffens Journalism Competition.

The awards program, administered by Sonoma State University, Rohnert Park, Calif., was named for the turn-of-the-century journalist.

Reuters opens Moscow outpost

COMPLETING WHAT IT called a "major investment" in its Russian operations, Reuters opened a new Moscow office July 19.

The office is equipped with state-of-the-art news production and satellite transmission equipment. It is located in the Radisson Slavjanskaya Hotel and office complex, home of the International Press Center & Club.

The office houses 50 workers and combines Reuters' news and financial wire services with its photo and television news operations.

The British-based company has over 300 clients in Russia and the former Soviet republics.

AP accepted into Japanese press club

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS became the first foreign media organization accepted into a reporters' organization that covers the Japanese imperial family.

Membership in the Palace Reporters' Club is expected to allow the AP increased access to palace officials and information concerning the royal family. The club is composed of 26 newspapers and broadcast companies.

The palace club's decision to accept the AP is the result of efforts by the news cooperative and other foreign media in Japan to break down barriers that have kept them out of the often exclusionary reporters' club system.

Nearly every Japanese government agency and major association has its own press club, to which newspaper and television reporters are assigned on a full-time basis.

The system was originally created to improve Japanese reporters' access to sources of information. However, critics say it fosters overly close ties between reporters and their sources and excludes both foreign and Japanese reporters who work for non-mainstream newspapers and magazines.

Last year, the AP became one of the first non-Japanese media organizations accepted into the Kasumi Club, which covers the Foreign Ministry. It has applied for several other memberships. Last month, the Japan Newspaper Publishers and Editors Association recommended all press clubs begin admitting properly accredited foreign reporters.

Women charged with stealing copies of student newspaper

TWO WOMEN WERE charged with stealing 4,000 copies of a conservative campus newspaper at Penn State University that frequently targeted their feminist group.

The same day of the April thefts, about 200 copies of the Lionhearted were burned outside the law office of the Penn State trustee who advised the 3-year-old paper.

Shannon Coulter and Alisa Giardinelli, both 21, were charged Monday with misdemeanor theft, receiving stolen property and conspiracy. They face court hearings Aug. 11.

The women graduated from Penn State in May with journalism degrees. Police said someone witnessed the theft, but there was no explanation for the delay in filing criminal charges.

Coulter was co-director of the campus feminist group Women's Concerns, and Giardinelli was a member. In April, Coulter said, the newspaper violated university anti-discrimination codes.

The stolen issue contained a full-page caricature of a woman columnist for the mainstream campus newspaper, the Daily Collegian.

The drawing showed the columnist, who is outspoken on women's issues, wearing a bikini with a sign reading "Feminist at Work."

Deceased newsman leaves $1 million for AP awards

OLIVER GRAMLING, THE newsman who launched the Associated Press broadcast news wire in 1941, has bequeathed his estate to the AP to create an annual awards program for AP staffers.

Gramling, who had no immediate survivors, died in May at age 88.

Three awards, to be known as the Gramling Awards, will draw from a fund of $1 million beginning in 1994. The Gramling News Award will give $10,000 to the AP reporter or editor "who exhibits the necessary writing talent, potential, initiative and determination to contribute significantly to truthful and unbiased news reporting and pursue an exceptional career."

The Gramling Achievement Award will give $10,000 to the AP staff member in any department "who most notably contributes to the organizational success of AP, for which he/she deserves acknowledgement and reward."

The Gramling Fellowship will provide $25,000 "to the most deserving and promising AP staff worker for extensive studies in a specific field of assignment."

In 1940, Gramling wrote The Story of News, a history of the AP. He joined AP in 1927 as a writer and editor in New York and in 1933 moved to Pittsburgh as a correspondent, later becoming bureau chief. Gramling moved through the ranks until 1941 when he was appointed to guide the AP into the broadcast news industry and developed the first AP Radio Wire.

Bill introduced to close loopholes in meetings act

A BILL TO close loopholes in California's open meetings act is working its way through the Legislature, but Palo Alto residents will not have to wait for statewide reform.

Thanks to a successful signature-gathering effort, a November ballot will allow voters to decide whether all closed sessions of local bodies will be taped, standing committees will be open to public access and votes during litigation sessions will be announced.

The Open Vote Initiative campaign began this spring after the City Council refused to tell how each member voted in a closed session in which a lawsuit challenging the expansion of an amphitheater was approved.

A report by the California First Amendment Coalition said residents who complained of increased noise levels from the facility welcomed the suit, but about 3,000 signers of the ballot petition apparently felt the council should at least reveal whether members voted yes or no on filing the lawsuit.

USA Today tunes up weather map

USA TODAY, WHICH pioneered the color weather map, has redesigned its national weather graphic on the back page of its main news section.

Introduced July 12, the new map includes more of North America plus forecasts for 180 cities, or 50% more.

Using no more space, the page — actually six-sevenths of a page of weather with an ad at the bottom — includes two color maps showing precipitation expected that day and the next. Also new are weather facts and a longer list of weather in international cities.

N.Y. Times Co. ups stock repurchase

THE NEW YORK Times Co., as part of its pending purchase of Affiliated Publications Inc., has raised by 50% the amount it will spend to repurchase its own stock.

The Times Co. on June 21 said it would spend $100 million to buy its own stock, in accordance with terms designed to keep its stock price in line with the purchase agreement. July 15, after nearing the limit, it raised the buyback to $150 million.

The Times Co. said it would halt repurchases just before proxy statements are mailed to Affiliated shareholders in late August.

The Times Co. owns the New York Times, and Affiliated owns the Boston Globe.

Editor takes a civic role

TALLAHASSEE (FLA.) DEMOCRAT executive editor Lou Heldman makes no apologies for participating in the world of officialdom he once was content to observe.

A member of Tallahassee's Community Relations Council — an unpaid group appointed to advise the City Commission on race relations — Heldman thinks it is fine for journalists to shed their rigid mantle of neutrality and take part in community affairs.

"I've come to believe that journalists must also be good citizens. And being a good citizen sometimes requires giving something of yourself outside your work," Heldman wrote in a Sunday column July 11.

Heldman lauded Democrat staffers who tutor children and who organize local events but acknowledged limits to journalists' involvement.

"I don't mean that journalists should run for office or take sides in political campaigns or act as press agents for organizations they belong to," said Heldman, who admits to being more family-oriented these days.

Advocating that journalists invest "sweat equity" into their communities, he said, "That usually won't mean participation in newsmaking organizations."

He said he recuses himself from decisions on covering the advisory council and his participation caused no problems in the newsroom, but the council has been valuable for the dialogue it fosters between the races.

But the column failed to delineate acceptable participation.

That is what editors get paid for, Heldman said in a brief interview, to make decisions when there are no rights and wrongs.

The simple criterion should be, he said, "The activity shouldn't compromise the fairness, or perception of fairness, of the paper." —George Garneau

Fox TV, newspapers run reading program

FOX TELEVISION STATIONS in the Washington cities of Spokane and Yakima have joined with area newspapers to sponsor a summer reading promotion, Reading Turns on Your Headlights, designed to encourage children and parents to read together.

Idaho's Lewiston Morning Tribune and Washington's Spokesman-Review, Wenatchee World, Walla Walla Union Bulletin, East Oregonian and Yakima Herald-Republic agreed to print 26 story excerpts, for kids 2-9 and 10-14, over 13 Sundays from June through August. Kids and parents are supposed to read them and mail a form to the Fox Kids Club, which draws for prizes, including a trip to Hollywood.

One way or other

MAGAZINE JOURNALIST JAMES Fallows didn't get mad when the Wall Street Journal emasculated his letter to the editor. He got even.

Fallows, Atlantic Monthly Washington editor, penned a seven-page article in the summer edition of the American Prospect, a liberal quarterly, about the affair.

The letter, written in response to a Journal opinion piece criticizing Japanese economic policy, was included in the article. It spanned more than four pages and included 33 signatures.

Underlying the spat is a basic disagreement over which is more successful: the Japanese government's active role in the economy or the more laissez-faire U.S. system.

Fallows led a group of journalists and economists who signed a letter to the editor disputing the Journal's March 11 op-ed piece by conservative American Enterprise Institute scholar Karl Zinsmeister, who faulted Japanese government policy. The letter also attacked the Journal for years of "misguided articles" about Japan's economy.

After weeks of negotiation about how to play the response — as a letter or column, with all the names or not — the Journal May 20 published two paragraphs of the letter and all the names.

The Journal's editorial page editor, Robert Bartley, and other Dow Jones & Co. executives "have replied again and again about the need for open criticism and free debate. Just not in their own pages, please," Fallows wrote.

Bartley called the article "silly" and said Fallows "always struck me as a sensible guy. I don't know what got into him."

He said the Journal refused to run the original letter because it was four times as long as the piece it responded to and double the daily letters space. But it agreed to a response as long as Zinsmeister's column with no more than two bylines.

When that was refused, the Journal ran the brief statement of opposition, with a list of names longer than the letter.

"We were willing to publish something saying all these people disagreed with our position. We just weren't willing to give it more space than we thought our readers would be interested in," Bartley said. —George Garneau

Public records

A MAN SEEKING access to college sex-education films he believes to be inappropriate has been stonewalled by a New York state-supported college. Frank Russo invoked the state's Freedom of Information Law, arguing that because Nassau Community College on Long Island is a state institution, the curricula and course materials should be considered public records.

A trial court has agreed with him, but the college prevailed on appeal. We think the appellate court's opinion that the college can withhold material because it can be obtained elsewhere is specious.

Now the case is before New York state's highest court, the Court of Appeals, and Russo is supported by an amicus brief from the Student Press Law Center and the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, both based in Washington.

This case is not about academic freedom, as the college claims, but is simply a matter of whether a community college supported by taxpayers' funds is covered by the state open records law. It doesn't make any difference whether the information sought by Russo involves a sex-education film or something else. The principle is the same.

The argument put forth by the Reporters Committee and the Student Press Law Center is straightforward and should command the attention of the Court of Appeals:

"For journalists who cover the activities of taxpayer-supported colleges and universities, especially those who write for campus publications, the statutory right of access to a broad range of records maintained by a school is crucial to their ability to effectively report the news.

"A court ruling that public educational institutions, in whole or in part, are exempted from the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law would seriously impinge on the public's right to know . . . .

"Academic activity is the business for which an educational institution is created. To deny citizens the information necessary to determine how that institution is fulfilling its obligation to educate, or to limit the inquiry to administrative or bookkeeping matters, effectively prevents public oversight of the schools they support."

NBC hurt everyone

IN FEBRUARY, WHEN NBC admitted it had rigged a broadcast showing a General Motors truck bursting into flames in a collision, E&P said, "It was blatant falsification and all media will suffer because of it."

The June 21 issue of National Review has taken that incident, added a "catalog" of similar abuses by other television networks and published an article titled "The Decline of American Journalism." There isn't a word in the article about any other medium, let alone newspapers, and yet the magazine says journalism is on the decline.

The article was about the decline of broadcast journalism and it should have said so. Print journalists have a right to resent this. Also, they should rebel when people make derogatory references to "the media" or "the press" when they mean television specifically. Maybe we should coin some new words to take the place of these all-encompassing ones.

He's perplexed about Conniff's 'commandments'

I UNDERSTOOD MICHAEL Conniff's Commandments 1 and 2 but what is this "product champion with clout" he pontificates about in Commandment 3 (E&P, April 17)?

Is he talking about what a man like myself (selling the Saturday Evening Post at the age of 10 in a small South Dakota town) would identify as the publisher? If he is, then Commandment 3 fails for lack of status on the newspaper and in the community.

A newspaper, to be a newspaper, must have a publisher — the person in charge of and personally identified with the newspaper and the newspaper's community. A publisher knows what is going on in his community; he has opinions and suggestions about "how things ought to be" in the community and is not shy about telling the community so. Without a publisher, a newspaper is only, as Mr. Conniff writes, an "enterprise."

The bottom line is important, in fact critical, but the test that counts is: Does the newspaper serve its community so well that it cannot imagine being without a paper?

Mr. Conniff is of the generation that identifies newspapers as "businesses" that MBA graduates — "newspaper experience unnecessary" — can manage.

Commandments 1 and 2 may provide surprising information to MBAs. A "product champion" for the "enterprise" is probably intelligible to students of product marketing but why not "editor and community champion." We're talking about newspapers, man.

Mr. Conniff suspects correctly: He has fallen under the spell of the devil and is contributing to the obituary of the Great American Newspaper. He can beat the devil by scrambling his way back to first principles.

Newspapers are "interactive" by definition. They are in a category not occupied by any other business in America and they are uniquely the only business with their own clause in the federal Constitution.

Newspaperdom®

50 YEARS AGO . . . British Prime Minister Winston Churchill paid a major tribute to the quality and accuracy of war coverage. In an address to Commons following the downfall of Italian leader Benito Mussolini, Churchill said, "Very complete, vivid and excellent accounts are appearing in newspapers of all operations . . . .

"An immense army of correspondents move with the troops and carry their cameras into the heat of the fighting. An immense volume of material of the deepest interest and of a very high level of quality and accuracy fills the public press from hour to hour. And there is at present very little which I could add to this except, of course, to set matters in proportion as I and my colleagues view them and to place the proper emphasis, or what we conceive with our fallible judgment to be the proper emphasis, upon the various facts and factors."

Correction

A CAPTION WITH the story "Violence in Norwalk" in the July 24 issue incorrectly reported that a Norwalk, Conn., Hour photographer had been assaulted and had his camera smashed. Actually, the photographer managed to avoid an attack.

During an assault on journalists July 6 in Norwalk, a photographer for the Connecticut Post of Bridgeport, was injured and had his equipment damaged.

Takes issue with Cathy Black critic

NOW THAT I am a free man, I can at last respond to a letter from a Bill Northrop, marketing director of the Observer Publishing Co., Washington, Pa., which you published in your May 15 issue.

In his letter, Bill complains about the "all-leather suit" worn by Cathleen Black during her keynote session at an NAA marketing conference in New York.

Now, Bill, really. Black certainly warrants a few digs, but, commenting on her mode of dress is simply irrelevant. I don't think anybody has ever complained that standard dress for the men who attend newspaper meetings appears to be bright-green, patterned golf pants and, uniformly, blue blazers.

It occurs to me that one of the reasons why readership by professional women is down may well be that people like Bill continue not to understand that segment of the marketplace. If you still harbor perspectives on women that equate "respectability" with hemline and fabric, you've got a long way to go, baby.

That feels much better.

Peter M. Winter

(Winter is a former NAA senior vice president, market development who recently joined Cox Newspapers as vice president for marketing development.)

Think creatively

RIGHT ON!

There is more that an editor or publisher can do to promote right-brain thinking (E&P, July 3) besides reading a book about it or finally letting that renegade reporter run with his or her wild idea. He or she could bring on a creativity consultant.

Creative thinking can lead to more than a better editorial product. It has bottom-line significance to newspapers because, in the long run, greater creativity also means greater sales and larger profits at lower costs.

"Doing it the way we did it last year" helps make deadline. But judging from the challenges that newspapers have faced in recent years, that's not going to make a paper that people want to read.

New England Newspapers show tourists how to get the most out of their vacation dollar.

$13,256,000,000.00 was spent by tourists in New England in 1989,* making tourism one of the top industries in New England. New England offers something for everyone. Camp in the woods or spend the week on a windjammer. Go hiking or biking, enjoy the luxurious leisure of haute cuisine in an elegant restaurant or stuff yourself at a village clambake. Swim, sail, go antiquing, shoot the rapids, visit museums, play golf or tennis, or just sit on a porch and rock. Whatever you desire, you can find it in New England. Advertising in the New England newspapers tells consumers how to find their perfect vacation.

Different Worlds

National Association of Black Journalists survey reveals disparities in how black reporters and their managers view newsroom opportunities

by Mark Fitzgerald

BLACK JOURNALISTS AND their bosses work in the same newsrooms but live in different worlds, a new survey says.

"The gulf in communications between reporters and managers is so great that the journalists are afraid to speak up about race issues and are hitting a glass ceiling of opportunity that leads to frustration early in their careers," says "Muted Voices: Frustration and Fear in the Newsroom," the survey from the National Association of Black Journalists.

The survey of 537 black print and broadcast journalists, all of them NABJ members, and 100 randomly selected newsroom managers found sometimes startling disparities in how the two groups view their news organizations.

For instance, managers are nearly unanimous in their opinion that being black is not only no obstacle to success — it is something of an advantage.

Some 92% of managers said their promotion standards were the same for black and white journalists. And 97% said black reporters were "as likely or more likely" than others to be given a chance to advance in their careers.

African-Americans do not see it that way at all.

Just 28% of responding journalists said they believed their newsroom measured blacks and whites by the same standard for promotion.

Less than a quarter (24%) agreed they are given the same opportunity to rise in the organization as their colleagues.

Almost 60%, in fact, said they were not even given the same information about career opportunities other journalists are.

According to the survey, a chasm separates black journalists and managers in almost every area the newspaper industry is trying to address with diversity and multiculturalism efforts:

- Commitment to recruiting blacks.

Nine of 10 managers say their organizations make a "serious effort" to recruit black journalists. Exactly half of the African-American journalists say that is not so.

- Commitment to promoting blacks from entry-level positions.

Managers overwhelmingly (82%) say blacks spend no more time in entry-level jobs than any other journalists. Some 67% of African-Americans, however, say blacks spend more time in those jobs.

- Commitment to nurturing black journalists.

Again by big numbers (83%), newsroom managers say blacks are as likely or more likely to be "taken under the wing of a more seasoned colleague."

"Doesn't happen," the NABJ members say. Almost three-quarters (73%) said support is less likely to be given to a black journalist.

One big effect of this chasm, the survey found, is that newspapers are not getting the advantage of a diverse newsroom even when they have numerical diversity.

For example, nearly one in three African-American journalists said they are reluctant to bring up race issues — ranging from coverage of the black community to diversity in the newsroom — because they "fear [it] damages . . . chances for advancement."

"What this report finds is when the manager and the black reporter get down to talking, all those wonderful [diversity] theories go out the window," said Dorothy Gilliam, a Washington Post columnist elected as the new NABJ president.

Some newspaper executives said the report should spur the industry to move beyond a simple numerical analysis of newsroom diversity.

"We have to address the issue of whether getting numbers is enough," said Des Moines (Iowa) Register editor Geneva Overholser.

"If anything surprises me, it's that so many white managers are surprised by it," said William Boyd, an associate at the Poynter Institute in St. Petersburg, Fla. "We talk about it all the time." ■E&P

One big effect of this chasm, the survey found, is that newspapers are not getting the advantage of a diverse newsroom even when they have numerical diversity.

Lani Guinier tells media they failed

WITH A GENIAL smile and unfailing good humor, Lani Guinier had a harsh message for the media in her first meeting with a journalists association since her aborted federal nomination: they failed.

"Except for the lonely voices of a few black columnists and reporters, people such as Acel Moore [of the Philadelphia Inquirer] and Linda Moore [of the Nashville Tennessean], and a few others belatedly joined by an equally lonely number of their white colleagues, very few journalists were apparently interested in the facts," Guinier told the 18th annual convention of the National Association of Black Journalists in Houston.

Guinier said her nomination to be the chief civil rights enforcer at the U.S. Justice Department — a nomination ultimately withdrawn by President Clinton — suffered from careless, almost lazy reporting.

For the most part, she said, journalists swallowed whole the portrait painted by Guinier's political opponents: that of an anti-democratic, race-obsessed ideologue — a "Quota Queen," as the memorable headline of a Wall Street Journal editorial put it.

"The editor of the editorial page of the Philadelphia Inquirer — my hometown paper — called me a 'mad woman' before he had even read anything I had written," Guinier said.

Journalists, she said, seemed to willfully ignore that her writings never advocated racial quotas and that she was regarded at her law school as an advocate for racial healing and political tolerance.

"I was not the Quota Queen — I was the Misquoted Queen," Guinier said.

"Journalists," she added, "with too few exceptions, were complicitous, if only by their own silence, in my stereotyping and silencing."

Guinier said the poor performance by journalists can be traced to news industry hiring practices.

"First, there is simply not enough diversity at the decision-making and gatekeeping levels in either the print or broadcast media. Only 2% of editors nationwide are black," she said.

When news organizations do hire minorities, she said, the journalists too often are kept isolated "and their token status can be paralyzing.

"Even when there is more than token racial diversity," Guinier added, "there is still viewpoint monopoly. Instead, as David Barsamian writes, too many journalists simply become 'stenographers to power.' "

Above all, Guinier argued, journalists need to discuss race more.

"I ask you to join me in a national, public conversation about race, about justice, about fundamental fairness," she said.

At a NABJ press conference, Guinier said she maintained her silence during the nomination process on orders from the White House.

"I have always played by the rules," she said. "I was a team player."

She deftly declined to comment when a reporter asked her if she felt "stabbed in the back" by the Clintons, both of whom are, or were, personal friends.

"I think I'm not yet ready to share every deep personal feeling with the American public, although I appreciate the opportunity to share my ideas."

One little-noted personal detail about Guinier did emerge during the press conference, however, when Guinier was asked if she felt especially hurt to be opposed so vigorously by some Jewish newspapers.

Guinier's mother is Jewish, noted the questioner, Robin Washington, a black Jew and managing editor of the black-oriented weekly Bay State Banner in Dorchester, Mass.

Guinier said that although her mother is Jewish, "I do not consider myself to be Jewish. I was raised as a Unitarian." — Mark Fitzgerald

Rapper's insults start NABJ convention with a bang

by Mark Fitzgerald

A RAP MUSICIAN'S insulting and profane remarks about women ignited a furor at the opening session of the 18th annual National Association of Black Journalists convention in Houston.

Throughout much of the session, entitled "Hip-Hop: The medium, its message and responsibility," a member of the "gangsta rap" group Geto Boys, Bushwick Bill, peppered his remarks with references to women as "bitches" and "hos."

When an audience member asked the rapper why he used such terms, he replied that the only women he knows are "bitches and hos."

"My brother," she began, "I am a woman, a lady and president of this organization — and I am nobody's bitch and nobody's ho."

Audience grumbling turned to outrage, however, when Asbury Park (N.J.) Press recruiter Karyn Collins asked him what he called his mother.

According to witnesses, Bushwick Bill replied that he called his mother a woman, adding, "I'm not fucking my mother. If I was fucking you, you'd be a bitch."

More than 200 people, mostly women, stormed out of the session.

Many NABJ members who remained behind shouted their objections at Bushwick Bill, a Houston resident whose given name is Richard Shaw.

Bushwick Bill, who is a dwarf, glared back and affected a pose of defiance by trying to cross his tiny arms across his barrel chest.

Session moderator Darryl Dawsey, a Detroit News columnist, pleaded for calm but angered many with comments that seemed to defend the rapper.

"We have to respect sensibilities, yes. But we have to respect the sensibilities of the brothers who are facing this day after day. If we can't face this shit here, how are we going to face this shit out on the street?" Dawsey said.

The uproar stilled to near-absolute silence, however, when NABJ president Sidmel Estes-Sumpter strode into the room to confront Bushwick Bill.

Estes-Sumpter had been summoned by Washington Post columnist Dorothy Gilliam, who is succeeding her as president of the 2,000-member organization.

Estes-Sumpter, a physically imposing woman, locked eyes with the dwarf rapper and demanded an apology.

"My brother," she began, "I am a woman, a lady and president of this organization — and I am nobody's bitch and nobody's ho. You owe these women an apology."

Looking abashed, Bushwick Bill replied, "I apologize for speaking my mind and being myself."

Holding his arms out, he added, "I hope you'll find it big enough in your heart to forgive me." ■E&P

Trade Associations On Opposite Sides

Newspaper Association of America supports the proposed Telecommunications Infrastructure Act of 1993 and the National Newspaper Association opposes it

by Debra Gersh

THE DEBATE OVER the future of telecommunications policy continued recently on Capitol Hill as a Senate subcommittee held hearings on a bill to regulate the nation's information infrastructure.

The Telecommunications Infrastructure Act of 1993, S.1086, was introduced in early June by Sen. Daniel Inouye (D-Hawaii) and Sen. John C. Danforth (R-Mo.). The comprehensive legislation addresses a number of telecommunications issues, including the entry of regional Bell operating companies into information services (E&P, June 19, P. 15).

The Newspaper Association of America and the National Newspaper Association have come down on opposite sides of the proposal, with the NAA endorsing it and the NNA opposing it.

Representatives from both groups were among the 13 witnesses who testified July 14 before the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation's Subcommittee on Communication.

Uzal H. Martz Jr., president and publisher of the Republican in Pottsville, Pa., told the subcommittee that the NAA "is pleased that the bill includes safeguards to govern the provision of information services by the regional Bell operating companies."

Martz' testimony noted that "because the RBOCs retain monopoly control over essential local telephone lines and the ability and incentive to abuse this power, legislation imposing tough and effective safeguards on RBOC participation in electronic publishing is urgently needed to preserve diversity and promote competition in the information services marketplace.

"S.1086 provides a strong starting point by permitting the RBOCs to provide information services only through separate subsidiaries; mandating arm's-length dealings between the RBOC and its subsidiary; requiring the establishment of a cost allocation system to prevent cross-subsidization; and imposing certain other regulatory safeguards.

"NAA believes that these safeguards should be strengthened," Martz' testimony said.

He added that the NAA and the RBOCs have been negotiating for several months in an attempt to "reach agreement on a package of safeguards to help prevent anti-competitive abuses by the RBOCs when they enter information services."

The publisher cautioned the subcommittee, however, that until there is real competition in the local market "and the bottleneck controlled by the RBOCs is broken, the need for meaningful, effective safeguards remains."

According to Martz, the NAA supports the efforts of the NNA, which has come out against the bill primarily because it does not contain sufficient protection for community newspapers.

Testifying on behalf of the NNA, Dalton C. Wright, publisher of the Lebanon (Mo.) Daily Record and president of the Lebanon Publishing Co., said the "proposed legislation is deficient in one crucial respect: it does not assure that local information services — that is, community newspapers and local radio and television broadcasters — will be able to serve their communities by means of the new infrastructure."

Wright explained that "community newspapers are . . . in a unique but very vulnerable position with respect to new telecommunications technologies. We are vulnerable because we're local in scope and small in size. If appropriate regulatory mechanisms and policies are not in place, we can be squeezed out by larger, nationally based providers . . . .

"Any legislation concerning the telecommunications infrastructure must contain protection for equal rates and guaranteed access for local information providers if our local communities are to preserve the quality of life that community newspapers provide."

"Without protection for equal rates and access, community publishers will not be able to support the legislation," Wright testified.

Wright pointed to an amendment to S.1086 sponsored by Sen. Conrad Burns (R-Mont.), which "would provide for such guarantees while placing minimal burdens on telecommunications carriers."

The Burns Amendment addresses the issues of guaranteed access and guaranteed equal rates, Wright explained in his testimony.

"Without protection for equal rates and access, community publishers will not be able to support the legislation," Wright testified. "There is much in S.1086 that is important and valuable — the safeguards contained in the bill significantly reduce the ability of the telephone companies to abuse their monopoly power — but we believe that local information providers don't have the protection they need to compete fairly in the expanding marketplace that this bill would encourage." ■E&P

Portrayals of Latinos In And By the Media

by Debra Gersh

DURING HEARINGS IN Los Angeles on the events surrounding last year's rioting, part of the attention focused on the media.

"Several people asked me why we were interested in the media," said Cruz Reynoso, a member of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, which held the hearings.

"The media have everything to do with civil rights," he added, explaining that the media "set the national agenda for issues to be debated" and they define "who we are."

Speaking at a meeting devoted to "The News, Latinos and Civil Rights" during the National Association of Hispanic Journalists annual conference in Washington, Reynoso told of various portrayals of Latinos in and by the news media, as recounted by various witnesses.

What this means for the Civil Rights Commission, he said, is that it is vitally important for civil rights advocates and the media to work together.

While the Latino community in Los Angeles depends on the Spanish-language media, the mainstream media are still a source of great power, he said.

There is a need not just for Latino reporters but also writers and producers and others behind the scenes who make the decisions about what gets covered, he added.

Growing up, Reynoso said, there always were Spanish-language media in his home, but outside the home, in the mainstream press, "it was if we were invisible."

The Spanish-language media, he added, is not enough to reach the consciousness of the community as a whole.

"In this country, we are in a great experiment," Reynoso stated, "to see how people who are different in race, language, ethnicity and other factors can live together.

"Throughout your careers, there are editors and publishers and owners who will tell you differently, [that you] must be 'objective, above the fray.' I am challenging that assumption."
— Juan González, columnist, New York Daily News

Although it will be difficult, Reynoso thinks it is an experiment that can be won, with the help of the media.

"You are a vital part in making sure all of us recognize all Americans . . . [in] binding America together," Reynoso told the NAHJ attendees.

New York Daily News columnist Juan González said he has had many battles with editors during his 16 years as a journalist over his activism in the Puerto Rican community.

Even in the early years of the Puerto Rican civil rights movement in New York, which was "barely covered," González said, its leaders understood the "tremendous power and influence of the mass media to determine what people will think about.

"That power has been held closely," he added, noting that "the battle to open it up is one we must wage.

"Throughout your careers, there are editors and publishers and owners who will tell you differently, [that you] must be 'objective, above the fray,' " González said. "I am challenging that assumption."

González urged Latino journalists to continually "be concerned with what happens in our community" and to "insist that coverage be more equitable and balanced."

As one whose organization was the focus of media attention, Dolores Huerta, vice president of the United Farm Workers, said, "Mass-based organizations do not get the kind of coverage they should," especially when they are composed of minorities.

Huerta told the NAHJ that the only time the UFW could get coverage was when there was a strike, and even then, a peaceful action was portrayed as violent.

The media, she explained, "never really reported the type of organization going on or the benefits we were trying to achieve."

Further, portrayals of the workers often pictured them as illegal aliens and never told the "true story of the farm workers who go out and toil in the fields to feed the nation and they can't feed their own family."

Huerta told of stories that vilified the workers but never came down on the growers for refusing to negotiate or providing unreasonable working conditions.

She said it is "very painful when you see your own Latino reporters telling that story like the mainstream [media]. When we start mimicking the major press against our own people, it is a great disservice."

UFW founder Cesar Chavez understood the power of the media and started a newspaper and two radio stations to reach the union's constituency, Huerta explained.

The next step is television, she said, where there ought to be more dark-skinned people.

Racism is "very blatant. A lot of us feel it," she said. "We've got to start calling it what it is: racism."

"Civil rights are rights all people share. They are rights we all have and they are all the same rights," commented Guillermo Martínez, senior vice president/news, Univision, during a panel discussion following the speakers' remarks.

Referring to a newspaper article describing the tension between blacks and Hispanics over civil rights — since blacks have worked so hard for civil rights, can the Latinos just walk in and enjoy those protections as well? — Martínez pointed out that if you say you have civil rights and others do not, you are doing the same thing as those who would deny them to you.

"Journalists have an obligation that advocates who want to divide the community further do not get away with it because our people will suffer," he said.

Elvira Valenzuela Crocker, president of the Mexican American Women's National Association, noted that Latino journalists do a disservice to the Hispanic community if they do not know its history or its issues.

"The black civil rights movement did not occur because black journalists were not with them," she noted. "If ours is to happen, you have to be with us."

Alan Acosta, assistant metro editor of the Los Angeles Times, pointed out that not only do Latino journalists lack a sense of their history but also of their power.

"If you have power, you have to use it," he said, adding that when it comes to civil rights, each generation has to re-earn the gains made before it.

It was not until the riots in Washington, two years ago that issues affecting the Latino community gained exposure, explained Pedro Avilés, executive director of the Washington-based Latino Civil Rights Task Force.

Coverage of Latino civil rights was infrequent, unfocused and often negatively biased, he said, adding that it also is not as "sexy" a story as the rioting.

Nevertheless, Avilés said, "Latino journalists have to play a more active and assertive role in discrimination coverage."

Some Latino journalists have been very supportive, he continued, but "unless people take bold actions, we don't have any attention from the media on [these] issues."

Avilés stressed that he was not advocating riots, but he did note that is how the Hispanic community in Washington got some attention.

"I hope in your role as journalists you will take a more active and assertive role," Avilés said. "Yes, we've been successful in getting our issues out, but that was because of the riot. If you want to avoid that, journalists need to play a more assertive role."

On Capitol Hill, perception is 98% of reality, and the media are important in shaping that perspective, explained Mario Moreno, director of the Washington office of the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund.

"Unfortunately, stereotypes prevail and on the Hill, civil rights is seen as a black issue," Moreno said, telling the NAHJ audience, "You have to turn that around."

Hispanic journalists "tend to shy away from covering Hispanic issues because they do not want to get pigeonholed," commented ABC News Prime Time Live correspondent John Quiñones. "Don't worry about that." ■E&P

"The black civil rights movement did not occur because black journalists were not with them," she noted. "If ours is to happen, you have to be with us."

Two dailies merge

TWO DAILY NEWSPAPERS in Virginia, the News Messenger in Christiansburg and the News Journal in Radford, merged into the three times-a-week News July 4.

The controlled-circulation paper now will concentrate on local news coverage in an effort to better serve the marketplace, according to publisher Michael S. Blanton, who said there were no staff reductions as a result of the merger.

The role of Latino columnists discussed by NAHJ

by Debra Gersh

MANY NEWSPAPERS RUNNING or planning to start columns written from a minority viewpoint consider hiring black writers the place to start.

A handful of Latino journalists, however, have gone against that wave to earn and maintain regular columns in their newspapers.

Lori Rodríguez, columnist at the Houston Chronicle, said she got her column only after giving notice. Her managers asked how they could keep her on staff, and Rodríguez asked for a column, which she said was not given to her willingly.

"The Chronicle had in mind that its first minority columnist would be black," she told those at a workshop session of the annual National Association of Hispanic Journalists conference in Washington.

Rodríguez said she had to keep insisting that her column appear on the front of the Metro section, as editors tried to squirrel it away in other parts of the paper.

In addition to maintaining her visibility, Rodríguez said she has tried not to let her column become "homogenized." Rodríguez stressed the importance of a columnist finding his voice, no matter what the viewpoint.

"Your voice may not be left of center," she pointed out. "Just because you're Latino does not mean you have to be radical. It has to be your viewpoint. You'll be able to take the heat if it's your viewpoint."

Growing up in New York City, Juan González remembers only one Latino columnist among the city's dailies.

Now a columnist for the New York Daily News, González said there still is a dearth of Latino columnists among the city's four major dailies.

There has been "virtually no progress," he commented, adding that there is "still tremendous resistance to opening up those pages."

The role of a Latino columnist is like a "balancing act," González explained. "You need to meet the needs of people who feel their voice is not being heard while proving to white

Guatemalan Press Withstands Throwback to Dictatorship

Although the independent press is back on track, the seven-day return to press repression has left some scars

by Robert Buckman

FOR SEVEN TENSE days in May, it appeared that Guatemala's nascent press freedom would be strangled in its cradle when President Jorge Serrano partially suspended the constitution and assumed dictatorial powers, including press censorship.

However, the country's young democracy emerged from the week-long crisis essentially intact when Serrano was overthrown June 1 and eventually replaced with a longtime human rights champion, Ramiro de Leon Carpio.

Although the independent press is back on track in this Tennessee-sized nation that has enjoyed only 17 years of press freedom in its 172 years of independence, the seven-day throwback to the old days of strongman rule and press repression has left its scars on the Guatemalan press establishment.

Perhaps the most visible scar is the resignation of 45-year-old Mario Antonio Sandoval as director of the country's leading daily, Prensa Libre, after the paper's management agreed to impose self-censorship, two days after Serrano suspended the constitution, rather than to submit to government censorship.

(Buckman is a journalism professor at the University of Southwestern Louisiana in Lafayette and an expert on Latin American media.)

Sandoval had attempted to face down the censors and vehemently opposed self-censorship.

De Leon has appointed Sandoval his director of information, effectively ending his 27-year career on the newspaper co-founded by his father.

"My conscience is tranquil," the veteran newsman said in a telephone interview after confirming his appointment with de Leon June 24. "I can't say I'm very happy because I belong to the other side of the fence. Now I'm going to be getting the kicking instead of doing the kicking.

"You can be an ethical journalist and work for the government," Sandoval added. "I look on it as a challenge. I'm going to check the complaints I've had for so many years of the bureaucracy to see if they're real."

He said de Leon was "a good friend of mine for several years" who participated in demonstrations against Serrano's suspension of constitutional guarantees, including press freedom.

In his new post, Sandoval will be responsible for the government-owned newspaper, Diario de Centroamerica, its Channel 5 television station and its radio station, TGW.

After the suspension of constitutional rule and the imposition of censorship May 25, Guatemala's four fiercely competitive independent dailies found common cause in resisting, each in its own way.

The night of Tuesday, May 25, Serrano ordered police to surround the three morning dailies to block distribution.

Like Prensa Libre, the country's second-ranking daily, El Gráfico, resumed publication under self-censorship the day after Serrano's government forcibly blocked distribution of the four independent dailies. But in its first self-censored issue, El Gráfico carried a front-page protest against the censorship, and on its op-ed page, it ran only the titles of its regular columns with blank space underneath.

The third morning daily, Siglo Veintiuno, and the country's only evening paper, La Hora, refused to publish until May 31 to protest the government's actions. When Siglo Veintiuno, which means 21st Century in Spanish, resumed publication, it was with a new masthead: Siglo Catorce — Era de Oscurantismo, meaning 14th Century — The Dark Ages.

Guatemala's independent radio and television stations also were subjected to censorship. All the radio stations were required to play marimba music in place of news programs. Television news was censored and Channel 11 went to black when the crystal was removed from its antenna. Two wire services, Mexico's Notimex and Spain's Efe, reported difficulty in transmitting news.

Serrano, who was Guatemala's second democratically elected civilian president after 32 years of military-dominated governments, suspended constitutional guarantees, dissolved the congress and the supreme court and placed its leaders under house arrest, and announced that he would rule by decree until the convening of an assembly to draft a new constitution. Some observers believed he was acting under pressure from the armed forces.

The night of May 25, Serrano ordered police to surround the three morning dailies to block distribution.

The Miami-based Inter American Press Association sent Serrano a telegram denouncing his actions and calling on him to restore the "constitutional guarantees and the legal rights which Guatemalan citizens had earned with so much struggle." The IAPA also condemned the arrest of a Mexican correspondent for carrying a "prohibited" newspaper. The message was signed by IAPA first vice president A. Roy Megarry of the Globe and Mail in Toronto and by press freedom chairman Eduardo Ulibarri of La Nación in Costa Rica.

The U.S. State Department also condemned Serrano's seizure of power and suspended several aid programs.

Sandoval, who had been a persistent critic of Serrano in his column "Catalejo" ("Spyglass"), related that on the evening of May 25, two government censors came to the paper's offices to examine the page proofs of the Wednesday morning edition.

"I let them into the building, but I wouldn't let them into the newsroom," Sandoval said. "I met them outside with our lawyer. In its decree, the government had said that it would honor all international treaties Guatemala had signed. I asked the censors if that included the U.N. Charter and the O.A.S. [Organization of American States] Charter. They said yes. So I said that under the Universal Declaration of Human Rights what they were doing was illegal."

When the censors persisted in their demands to proof the paper, Sandoval said he handed them the page proofs and a black marker, told them to cross out anything they found objectionable and informed them that the paper would be published with their marks on the pages.

"Then they said, 'You're right, this is illegal,' and they left," Sandoval said. The paper then began preparing a press run of 120,000 — 10,000 more than usual.

"Then, at 2 a.m. Wednesday, about 200 police troops surrounded the building and would not let anyone in or out of the paper," Sandoval related. "We hid about 10,000 copies of the paper throughout the building. I told our security not to resist but to lock the doors." The police did not storm the paper, he said, but merely laid siege to prevent distribution.

"Someone, I don't know who, smuggled out some copies of the paper and managed to distribute 10,000 photocopies," he said. "Some were sent by fax. El Gráfico and Siglo Veintiuno also distributed photocopies."

May 27, Sandoval said, Serrano asked to meet with Prensa Libre's board of directors. Sandoval attended the meeting, which was held at the home of one of the directors.

"He [Serrano] said even my presence bothered him," Sandoval said. It was then that the president gave the directors the choice of prior censorship or self-censorship. Pedro Julio García, a co-founder of Prensa Libre in 1951 who retired as director nine months ago, and another director, Alvaro Contreras, agreed to self-censorship.

"That night, when I went back to the paper, I found that someone else had already decided on [the next day's composition]," Sandoval said. "The board had temporarily removed my authority. I was like a piece of furniture."

Sandoval told Editor & Publisher the day after his resignation, "There was nothing else I could do. Our only alternatives were self-censorship or government censors. Well, I don't like either one, but I thought it was better to have the censors because you can always fool them."

The name Prensa Libre means "free press" in Spanish. Sandoval said the paper's employees cheered him when he came to the paper after resigning and they began wearing badges bearing the paper's logo with the letter X through the word Libre.

"The morale in the paper was very bad," Sandoval said. Yet, he insisted that he harbors no resentment toward García and Contreras.

"They are not bad guys," he said. "Both of them were kidnapped [by guerrillas in the early 1980s] and the paper had to pay huge ransoms for them, but they made a very tragic mistake."

The paper's associate director, José Eduardo Zarco, was in Miami on his honeymoon when Serrano suspended the constitution. Contacted by E&P, Zarco praised Sandoval's decision to resign, saying it was "made under excessive government pressure taken against him specifically."

Zarco explained that in the nine months that Sandoval had been director, he had revamped the paper to make it more attractive to younger readers, had infused it with "new blood" and had imbued it with a sense of journalistic professionalism; that the paper had become more aggressive in its criticism of the Serrano government, and that Sandoval had initiated investigative journalism, something previously unknown in a country long plagued by dictators.

"The Guatemalan press did a very good job under very trying circumstances," Williamson said, "and it appears that there is a happy ending."

Zarco also credited Sandoval's marketing program with boosting the paper's circulation from an average of under 80,000 to over 100,000. Distribution in Guatemala is through street sales.

Serrano also had reason to dislike the 30-year-old El Gráfico, owned by the three Carpio brothers, Jorge, Roberto and Mario. Jorge Carpio was Serrano's opponent in a bitter, mud-slinging runoff election in January 1991. Though El Gráfico also is conservative, Carpio and Serrano harbored a personal dislike for one another, and El Gráfico had been constantly critical of Serrano.

The Guatemalan press long has been buffeted by political forces of the right and left in this violence-prone country of 9 million people, most of them impoverished Indians. A high illiteracy rate also hindered development of the print media.

Guatemala has known only two periods of genuine democracy and press freedom. The first began in 1944, when liberal forces overthrew the dictator-

A Call For Better International Reporting

Pulitzer Prize winner Roy Gutman says U.S. press should offer more coverage of foreign governments and the United Nations

by M.L. Stein

THE NEWS MEDIA should "let the daily claptrap go once in a while" and dig into international issues that governments are not making clear, Long Island, N.Y., Newsday European bureau chief Roy Gutman contends.

Traditionally, he said, domestic reporting concerns itself with domestic politics while foreign correspondence is considered to be above politics.

"But this is a strange and dangerous world . . . in which governments don't know what's important or how to focus their resources," the Pulitzer Prize winner said.

Taking the war over Bosnia as one example, he added that governments "vacillate. They procrastinate. They prevaricate. And mechanical, distant early-warning systems of the 1950s will no longer protect us from sneak attack and war."

Gutman spoke recently at the University of Southern California School of Journalism, which awarded him the $25,000 Selden Ring Award for his series on imprisonment, torture, deportation and mass murder in Bosnia. The stories also earned him the Pulitzer and the George Polk awards.

For the time being, he said, the media can serve as an early-warning system.

"We're, of course, not organized to do any such thing — heaven protect us from any organization — but we can, in our own different and competitive ways, use the best investigative skills, which have given American journalism its renown, to explore and define this new world and what's at stake in it," Gutman stated.

He listed several topics in Bosnia alone that he claimed cry out for journalistic investigation. Terming the United Nations a "vast bureaucracy without any system of oversight" and noting the tendency of governments to "cover up," Gutman suggested that the media find out how officials managed to conceal the existence of concentration camps and to bury reports of mass slaughter of civilians.

"We can do only so much. We cannot stop wars or even, regrettably, halt the killing of innocents. But, with careful work, we can alert the public to what is happening in the hopes that the public will react."
— Roy Gutman, Newsday

"If we don't find out and correct it, it will repeat itself," he predicted. "Not this year or next year but in a few."

These are among other subjects he recommended for media probing:

- Who shot down the Italian relief plane, an incident that led to a six-month suspension of the airlift into Sarajevo?
- Why has the United Nations "dithered" about setting up a trial court in connection with the "immense volume of crimes against humanity" in Bosnia and Croatia?
- How much of the food in the relief delivery program actually gets delivered to meet needs? How much is lost along the way or reported but never delivered?
- Treatment of the press by the U.N.

"We are the eyes and ears of the world. The risks taken daily are astonishing. Yet the U.N. treats us as an unnecessary inconvenience. They run empty flights to and from Sarajevo, while denying reporters whom they accredit the right to board them."

- What kind of body is the European Community?

"They send out monitors and collect reports. What happens with these reports? Where are they filed? Why is nothing ever published?"

Warning that such reporting is fraught with risks, Gutman observed, "We can do only so much. We cannot stop wars or even, regrettably, halt the killing of innocents. But, with careful work, we can alert the public to what is happening in the hopes that the public will react. It's difficult if you're up against the complacency of people with other things to worry about and the apathy of major governments, but it's worth a try to tell people what may be at stake. They'll have to make the decision."

Gutman said he is proud of his colleagues in the former Yugoslavia. Wearing bulletproof vests and traveling in armored cars, they drive through a hail of sniper fire to file their dispatches "in the vain hope that it will make a difference," he related. ■E&P

Pennsylvania Unleashes the Bells

New telecommunications law creates pathway to deregulate phone companies; newspapers, phone companies 'sort of happy with it'

by George Garneau

PENNSYLVANIA'S NEW telecommunications law creates a pathway to deregulate phone companies but shifts much regulatory responsibility to the state Public Utility Commission.

The compromise bill balances the interests of phone companies that want to expand into unregulated services against the interests of existing information providers that the phone companies will confront — mainly newspapers and cable television systems.

"Nobody's happy with it, but everybody's sort of happy with it," said Larry Boyle, general counsel for the Pennsylvania Newspaper Publishers Association. In other words, "We didn't lose, and they didn't win."

While newspapers succeeded in scuttling a provision that would have given phone companies automatic rate increases, the bill moves the battle over safeguards from the Legislature to the PUC.

"It sets up a mechanism to obtain [telephone] deregulation but it gives us an opportunity to make our case at the Public Utility Commission," Boyle said. "We're fortunate to have a strong PUC."

Newspapers argue that without strong protections, deregulated phone companies will use their monopoly control over telephone lines and revenue from regulated phone services to squash competing information providers.

To enter unregulated businesses, the law requires phone companies to apply to the PUC and file plans. But, as the saying goes, the devil is in the details, and important ones remain to be decided by the PUC.

Other provisions include:

- A ban on cross-subsidization, or the practice of making phone users pay the costs for their phone company to enter new businesses. The law requires the PUC to establish a formula for allocating costs so ratepayers do not pay for services they do not use.
- Services offered must be "competitive," a criterion judged by "the presence and viability of other competitors, including market shares."
- The PUC can require Bell of Pennsylvania to establish separate subsidiaries to provide unregulated services but only if it finds "substantial possibility" of unfair competition.
- In the interests of user privacy, phone companies are prohibited from disclosing information about individual customer usage and equipment, except in aggregate form.
- The PUC may open local phone service to competition.
- Stronger penalties allow the PUC to reregulate services in the absence of competition.

Two years in the making, the law passed the House and Senate in June and was signed by Lt. Gov. Mark Singel July 8.

The Pennsylvania bill appears to be less favorable to newspapers than its Illinois counterpart but more favorable than California's and roughly equivalent to New Jersey's, according to PNPA's comparison.

"There are a lot of items in it that do level the playing field," said Stanley Singer, president of the Pennsylvania Cable Television Association.

Bell of Pennsylvania, which expressed satisfaction with the final bill, argued that it needed deregulation in order to raise enough money to encourage investors to fund a new network, most likely of fiber optic cable. —Information supplemented by AP.

Newsday nabs Lars-Erik Nelson

IN A MAJOR defection from Mortimer Zuckerman's New York Daily News, Washington bureau chief and columnist Lars-Erik Nelson is moving to Newsday and New York Newsday as Washington columnist.

Nelson, a reporter and liberal columnist, told the New York Post he was dissatisfied with the paper's direction under the moderately conservative Zuckerman, who writes an occasional column.

Nelson, who is 52 and speaks five languages, joined the Daily News in 1979 after having worked at Reuters and Newsweek.

Word of his departure came a week after Zuckerman lured to the Daily News editorship British tabloid editor Martin Dunn from Rupert Murdoch's Boston Herald.

Keller grant funds First Amendment center in Colorado

LeROY KELLER, FORMER international vice president of United Press International, has given a grant to found the Keller Center for the Study of the First Amendment at the University of Colorado, Boulder.

Part of the CU political science department, the Keller Center will be dedicated to the study of freedom of the press, speech, religion and the right to congregate as outlined in the First Amendment of the Constitution.

The School of Journalism and Mass Communication and the School of Law also will be directly involved in the center, highlighting the amendment's interdisciplinary importance.

Keller, 87, began his journalism career with the UPI bureau in Denver shortly after his graduation from CU-Boulder in 1929. Keller later became sales manager and was responsible for bringing many countries into the UPI fold of subscribers and for upgrading UPI's international communications by employing cable and satellite technology. In 1951, Keller founded the first television news service at UPI.

The center will be headed by Cal Jillson, former chairman of the CU political science department, and a board of directors composed of CU political science faculty members. An outside advisory board including members of the media and legal professions also will be formed.

IAPA concerned about press threats

THE INTER AMERICAN Press Association expressed concern about events threatening press freedom in Argentina, Chile, Mexico and the Dominican Republic during the quarterly meeting of its Executive Committee in Miami last week.

In the Dominican Republic, the IAPA said, proposed taxes of 5% to 20% on newsprint, books and other materials needed for publication was "an attack on knowledge." A tariff reform law instituting the new taxes has been passed by the country's Senate and is now being debated in the Chamber.

After hearing a report of a June mission to Mexico, the IAPA governing body reiterated its condemnation of the takeover by employees of the daily newspaper Vanguardi of Chihuahua in January and urged judicial authorities to speed legal proceedings to return the property to its rightful owners.

In Argentina, IAPA condemned a system of quotas on import of certain types of newsprint imposed July 1. It also expressed concern with a proposed radio law, which among other things would create a press freedom committee to sanction the media.

The IAPA considered equally disturbing a government proposal in Chile that would limit the practice of journalism to graduates of journalism schools only.

Telescan, BPI deal

HOUSTON-BASED TELESCAN Inc. is setting up an on-line information system for two entertainment publications.

It recently signed an agreement with BPI Communications Inc., publisher of Billboard and the Hollywood Reporter, to deliver them via Telescan's electronic database, Telescan announced.

The first phase, scheduled to start Aug. 1, calls for basic electronic distribution of the two publications.

The second phase, according to Telescan president David Brown, is building a database in graphic form so users can compare sales records for a particular artist or obtain the history of a film director simply by punching buttons.

The technique will involve the music industry through Billboard and the film business through the Reporter.

Billboard is a record business trade magazine; the Reporter covers the film industry.

Book Reviews

by Hiley Ward

A Woman at War: Storming Kuwait With the U.S. Marines. Molly Moore. (Charles Scribner's Sons, 866 Third Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022), 336 pages, $22.50.

Here is the Ernie Pyle, close-to-the-battle, intimate report of the Gulf war that censors couldn't squelch. Molly Moore lived with the troops, breathed the sand, had her brushes with fear.

"I wrote this book because I believed the story of the ground war was left unfinished," she explains.

Unfortunately, she adds, because of poor ground communications, few of the stories she wrote for the Washington Post made it back in time.

However, this is more than an after-the-fact book on how a reporter covered the war.

"I had an unprecedented window on the war," she declares. And, indeed, she did.

Moore shared the tent of the commanding general of all the Marine forces, Lt. Gen. Walter E. Boomer. The kind-hearted general took pity on her, faced with the prospect of having to sleep in the sand at night under Army trucks.

She at first was repelled by the idea of living in the general's quarters, saying she had not taken special favors from the military before.

"Wait a minute, I chided myself," she explains, throwing journalism codes to the wind. "This was the chance of a lifetime. Who cared if it was special treatment? I'd have access to every detail of the war, every decision Boomer would make during the night."

The book might be better called An Intimate or Inside Report on a Field Commander. Night after night, she slept in a corner of the tent in her sleeping bag, her trained ear on the musings of the fatigued general and the sounds of the night.

One night the president called. "I was awakened again by a frustrated voice outside the tent: 'The fucking president is on the fucking line for the fucking CG [commanding general] and we can't make the fucking connection!'

"I heard Boomer snicker. 'You hear that?'

" 'Yeah, I hear.' I couldn't help but laugh.

" 'You know,' Boomer said in a low voice, 'for as smart as these kids are, sometimes you'd think they only know one word.' "

One night as she was writing a story and Boomer was eating his soup, the general noticed a mouse under her cot. " 'Oh, leave him alone,' Boomer said, returning to his soup. I went back to my story."

The charm of the book is that she deals with the mundane things of life and survival. She tells of two soldiers who collided when they went around the back of the vehicle to go to the "bathroom" in the dark of the night.

She had her own problems seeking privacy when she felt the need to relieve herself. She slipped into the dark of night, only to be told by a voice in the dark that she had entered a mine field. She settled for the dead center of the camp where nobody was at the time.

Like a good novelist, she probes into the psyche of not only Boomer but Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf and others. She is harsh on Schwarzkopf, blaming his anti-media attitudes on the mistreatment by the press of his father, a police official in the Lindbergh baby kidnapping case in the 1930s, and she cites Schwarzkopf's negative experience in Vietnam under Gen. William Westmoreland, who would always be accompanied by a flock of journalists.

She almost fades into the military. In the victorious entry into the Kuwaiti capital, she notes, "Throngs emerged to greet us . . . ."

And: "I fell in step beside Boomer." And: "I hovered at the heels of Boomer's small entourage."

This book is fun, firsthand, a complete record day by day, a book about the Persian Gulf war that will have lingering historical value.

Moore is New Delhi bureau chief for the Post.

Pluralizing Journalism Education: A Multicultural Handbook. Carolyn Martindale, ed. (Greenwood Publishing Group, 88 Post Rd. West, Box 5007, Westport, Conn. 06881), 264 pages, $55.

Billed as a practical handbook, the book offers extensive brainstorming on ways to increase the participation of minorities in journalism and ways to create tolerance in the media with all minorities, racial and lifestyle.

Ideas range from ways to interest high school minorities in the field of journalism to how to retain the new minority person on the faculty.

Robert M. Ruggles of Florida A&M University argues in a chapter on recruiting students that the process needs to begin before high school to let the minority student know journalism is an option. He suggests identifying schools enrolling the largest number of minorities and including them in an annual journalism day visit to the campus and also identifying national scholarship winners for special recruitment.

Orlando L. Taylor of Howard University talks about ways to increase the hiring pool so it has greater diversity, for instance, not requiring rigid guidelines for teaching experience. He also advises building "a personal network with people of color."

Sharon Bramlett-Solomon of Arizona State University argues that university service, expected of new faculty, should receive more weight in the tenure process.

James Philip Jeter of Florida A&M recommends using black newspapers in class. "A regular reading of the black press will reveal an additional dimension of controversial black figures and provide more opportunities for students to know about the person behind the image."

Carolyn Martindale of Youngstown (Ohio) State University, noting that most people have been a victim of stereotyping, offers guidelines to counter stereotyping, such as, "Don't lump everyone in the group together and fail to recognize the existence of differences" and "don't refer to a person's minority status when it is not relevant to the story." ■E&P

Travel section

GANNETT NATIONAL NEWSPAPER Sales has announced a special travel section titled Florida: An A-Peeling Journey.

The special travel section will be distributed by 25 newspapers in 10 states Oct. 24. Gannett says advertisers will reach 2.6 million households and is offering four-color and black-and-white ads.

A dispute over advertising space

AFL-CIO protests decision by the New York Times to refuse to allow it to buy ad space in an advertorial section

by Ann Marie Kerwin

THE AFL-CIO ORGANIZED a protest against the New York Times July 20 because the group says it was not allowed to buy ad space in a pro-North American Free Trade Agreement advertorial.

The protest was critical of the newspaper, claiming its integrity has been compromised by running the advertorial section.

In a letter to Times executive editor Max Frankel signed by 11 journalists and academics, the AFL-CIO wrote, "It is a basic tenet of responsible journalism that the views of advertisers should not influence editorial content. Nor should editors beat the drum to ingratiate themselves to advertisers. Nor should a newspaper discriminate against advertisers simply because the paper disagrees with their viewpoint. The New York Times violates all three principles with its special advertising sections on the North American Free Trade Agreement."

The letter was signed by, among others, Patricia Aufderheide, associate professor, School of Communication, American University; Ben Bagdikian, former dean, Graduate School of Journalism, University of California, Berkeley; Stanley Cohen, former Washington editor of Advertising Age, and Norman Solomon, co-author of Unreliable Sources.

It concluded, "By soliciting and creating editorial material specifically designed for these exclusive advertising sections, the Times throws so much editorial weight behind its pro-NAFTA position as to raise serious questions about the fairness of news reporting. Not only has the Times editorialized strongly in favor of NAFTA, but its news reports and analyses have strongly supported the benefits of more open trade, giving short shrift to opponents, even though opinion in both Congress and in the public are deeply divided. The Times should reconsider the exclusiveness of its advertorial series or cancel it entirely."

NAFTA
North American Free Trade Agreement
MEXICO: A MARKET THAT IS READY FOR SERVICES

SUDDENLY, MEXICO AND THE STATES ARE A WIDER LOT CLOSER.

The federation of trade unions held organized protests in seven cities: New York, Chicago, Washington, Philadelphia, Detroit, San Francisco and Los Angeles. Approximately 25 to 40 people attended at each location, according to AFL-CIO estimates.

An ad hoc group of NAFTA supporters sponsored the advertorial, which was the second in a series of three scheduled this year. The third is slated to run before the congressional vote in either late October or early November. (The seven-page advertorial originally scheduled to run July 20 was postponed until July 21 because of production delays.)

Advertisers sponsoring the section included AT&T; Bancomer, a Mexico-based bank; Aeromexico Airlines; Telmex, a Mexican telephone company; Celadon Trucking Services; Metropolitan Life Insurance, and Skytel, a wireless computer-messaging service.

The AFL-CIO opposes NAFTA in part because it believes that the agreement will cause a decline in jobs for American workers.

"The problem we had with the advertorial was that this was a newspaper putting out a special section that only told one side of the story. We thought both sides should have been presented," said Candace Johnson, spokeswoman for the AFL-CIO.

A flier distributed the day of the protest states, "The Times earned its reputation as a respected voice by adhering to the principles of balance and fairness. However, with the publication of this advertorial — with its peculiar blend of news, opinion and advertising — the Times diminishes its journalistic integrity."

Johnson said the union group had tried to buy an ad within the section but was rejected.

The newspaper maintains that the section was paid advertising and the AFL-CIO's request was like "Chevrolet asking to buy space within a Mercedes-Benz ad," according to Times spokesman William K. Adler.

He said the group was given the opportunity to advertise elsewhere in the newspaper. Johnson said that was not good enough.

"We wanted to be included in the advertorial so we didn't pursue advertising elsewhere. Why should we be in the B section when everyone else who was talking about NAFTA was in the one section?" Johnson said.

"What was different about the advertorial was the format. It was not designed to look like an ad, so it was not like we wanted to be in Mercedes-Benz's ad. This section was made to look like a newspaper and they wanted it to look like a newspaper," she said. "We wanted to be able to put our views within the same environment."

Johnson noted that the group also tried to work with the Times to get its opinions on the op-ed page that day but was unsuccessful.

"But obviously many groups are trying to get their viewpoints on the op-ed page," she said.

The Times ad department is "issue-neutral," Adler said, and would welcome any ads from the AFL-CIO, including those scheduled to run the day of the third advertorial section — although not in it.

"The Times will accept ads from any group as long as they meet the standards of our advertising acceptability department," Adler said.

The protest raises questions about how advertorials are perceived by the public and if readers believe advertorials are subject to the same standards of objectivity as news stories.

In a flier handed out by protesters, the AFL-CIO said the advertorial was "designed to disguise ads as news."

The AFL-CIO compared the Times advertorial on NAFTA with the Wall Street Journal's special editorial section Sept. 24, 1992, and Los Angeles Times section on the same topic.

"The Wall Street Journal and the Los Angeles Times both have published special advertising sections on NAFTA," the flier stated, "but, in contrast to the New York Times, they told both sides with their staff stories, including both pros and cons of the agreement. And they sold more ads than the New York Times!"

Both the Journal and Los Angeles Times special sections originated from the editorial department. The New York Times advertorial originated with the international advertising sales staff and was buried in the center of the business section's stock tables.

The AFL-CIO flier pointed to a danger that editorial staffs have voiced for years about advertorials.

"Journalists draw a clear distinction among news, editorial opinion and advertising as a matter of principle. When these lines are not maintained — when news, editorial and paid ads are blurred together — the credibility of the entire publication is called into question," the flier said.

The editorial portion of the advertorial was prepared by the McLeod Group, New York City, a custom publishing house that specializes in advertorials. A disclaimer was printed that said none of the articles were reported or edited by New York Times staff people.

"There is a danger that the public might not recognize an advertorial, which is why the paper has to be careful to label those pages as advertisements and be sure to make it look different than the editorial sections," Adler said. "I think readers realize that an all-advertising section is a different animal than journalists writing a balanced story and selling ads on that page."

The New York Times advertorial does meet all the guidelines for advertorials recommended by the Society of American Business Editors and Writers to protect journalistic integrity.

The guidelines recommend that a clear-cut delineation between advertising and editorial be maintained at all times; material produced by an editorial staff or news service should be used only by sections controlled by editorial departments; and sections controlled by advertising departments should be distinctly different from news sections in typeface, layout and design (E&P, June 13, 1992, P. 18).

"This is a marginal one. I don't like advertorials at all, but this one I don't hate as much because it does satisfy all the criteria. . . . The Times did as good a job as it could with this. But it is still in murky territory," said Gary Klott, a former New York Times reporter and a member of the SABEW who has advocated clear lines between editorial and advertising.

"It's not the reader getting deceived here because this is clearly some sort of advertising. I think readers would know that this was an ad," Klott said. "But I think the political group used the advertorial issue to get some hay out of that."

Adler said, "If that were indeed their strategy, the demonstration would constitute merely another part of free expression just as the news and advertising of a newspaper. All of it contributes to the debate of this issue."

This type of advertorial, rather than stifling free speech, encourages debate on the topic, Adler said. It would be more chilling on free speech to demand that every issue-centered advertorial have the other side presented in the name of fairness.

"If you apply those sorts of restrictions to it, then you are taking away both sides' ability to advertise their views and no discussion would take place," he said. He noted that Sullivan vs. New York Times, a case on which much of today's freedom of the press is based, centered on a controversial ad about civil rights. ■E&P

The newspaper maintains that the section was paid advertising and the AFL-CIO's request was like "Chevrolet asking to buy space within a Mercedes-Benz ad," according to Times spokesman William K. Adler.

Audit Bureau guide

THE AUDIT BUREAU of Circulations has produced a new Publisher's Promotion Guide to help newspapers and magazines use ABC reports and services to sell ads.

The booklet helps publications use their circulation strengths when they are selling advertising. Included are interviews and testimonials from ABC members — such as Bernard Flanagan, vice president of marketing of Dow Jones & Co., and Joyce Sokol, circulation manager of Men's Health — about how they use the reports.

Japanese papers report drop in advertising

JAPAN'S NEWSPAPER advertising expenditures reported decreased for the second time in 27 years.

According to Dentsu's "1992 Advertising Expenditures in Japan" survey, gross advertising expenditures fell 4.6%, to 5,461.1 billion yen in the calendar year 1992. The survey, released Feb. 15, analyzes the slowdown of the Japanese economy, sluggish private sector performance, cautious consumer demand and other factors that have combined to inhibit advertising spending.

Newspaper advertising expenditures dropped for the second consecutive year, falling 9.5% to 1,217.2 billion yen from the previous year, as reported in the NSK News Bulletin.

Extra price cuts for cardholders

SACRAMENTO (CALIF.) BEE subscribers who now hold the paper's Advantage card for retailer discounts are eligible for extra price cuts.

The new Advantage Extra offers weekly discounts of 25% or more to cardholders. Advantage cards can be obtained by paying in advance for a three-month daily subscription, paying by credit card or buying one for $4.50 on a quarterly basis.

Advantage Extra allows participating retailers to promote a product or service for a minimum of one week to 300,000 cardholders. The regular Advantage card requires merchants to commit to a 10% minimum discount for a six-month period.

AMCEA celebrates 40th anniversary

THE ADVERTISING MEDIA Credit Executives Association celebrates its 40th anniversary this year.

Its objective is to improve credit management techniques and provide educational training and network services for the advertising industry.

Currently, AMCEA's board is headed by Ron Hendrix, president, Arizona Republic; Kerry O. Kelley, first vice president, Baltimore Sun; Kim Walter, vice president, Los Angeles Daily News; and James Leppert, secretary/treasurer, Chicago Sun-Times.

The organization serves the media industry and credit executives throughout the United States and Canada.

New travel advertising section

THE PORT HURON, Mich., Times Herald has launched Travel, a new advertising section.

While reviewing its area's list of businesses, the newspaper realized the travel category had great potential, but no actual advertisers.

After conducting an informal focus group comprising U.S. and Canadian travel-related businesses, the Travel pages were launched based on the group's stated wants and needs.

The pages run every Sunday, and are created by the ad department using wire stories. A guest columnist is also included every week.

Projections for the first year estimate revenue of $37,232 for the 30,000-plus-circulation daily.

So far, the pages generate approximately 80 inches of advertising per week.

Phoenix papers honor advertisers

BUSINESSES AND THEIR advertising agencies were honored at the fourth annual Tops in Newspaper Advertising competition awards, sponsored by the Arizona Republic, Phoenix Gazette and Arizona Business Gazette.

All three newspapers are published by Phoenix Newspapers Inc.

Showcasing the most creative ads published in the newspapers during the past year, the TINA competition accepted entries in 54 retail and classified advertising categories. Entries were judged by three outside advertising experts: senior vice president of the American Association of Advertising Agencies' Western regional office Jerry Gibbons; manager, retail sales training and consulting of the Newspaper Association of America Jeffrey L. Greene; and associate creative director of DDB Needham/Chicago Brad Morgan.

Best of Show was awarded to Dillard's department store. Forty-three other winners were honored.

PEPSI-COLA CO. ran about 200 local newspaper ads, as well as several in USA Today, following the rash of hoaxes in June that had people claiming they found syringes and hypodermic needles in the company's cans of soda.

The ads, put together by New York ad agency BBDO Worldwide, thanked consumers for supporting the soft drink manufacturer while the claims were being investigated. One ad, after explaining the hoax was "plain and simple not true," ended by telling consumers to "Drink All the Diet Pepsi You Want." Some, like this one, ran with only the headline "Thanks America" and included a coupon worth a dollar off a case of soda.

The first two reports of syringes in Pepsi soda cans were in Seattle June 10 and 11. The hoax soon spread across the nation in a series of copycat incidents in states such as Louisiana, Michigan and Wisconsin. In the Wisconsin case, a newspaper telemarketer at the Milwaukee Sentinel was responsible for falsely claiming she had found a syringe in a Pepsi while in the newspaper's lounge (E&P, July 3, P. 12; July 17, P. 29.)

Newhouse got $43 million from St. Louis JOA

NEWHOUSE NEWSPAPERS HAS earned a tidy sum in the years since it stopped publishing the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Globe folded Oct. 29, 1986, a little more than two years after Newhouse was essentially forced to sell, rather than shut, the historic paper.

However, the St. Louis Agency Agreement between Newhouse and the Pulitzer Publishing Co. lives on — and over the past five years has paid Newhouse more than $43,460,000, according to the prospectus for a Pulitzer common stock offering.

In fiscal 1992, the agency paid $11,690,000 to the Herald Co., the Newhouse unit that published the Globe.

The prospectus listed these payouts to Newhouse going back five years: fiscal 1988, $11,100,000; 1989, $8,127,000; 1990, $5,253,000; 1991, $7,290,000.

These sums represent half of the annual profits of Pulitzer's St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Newhouse's role, according to the prospectus, is to "share half the cost of and to share in a portion of the proceeds from the sale of capital assets used in the production of the Post-Dispatch."

This arrangement of splitting profits — or losses — will continue until at least Dec. 31, 2034, at which time "either party may elect to renew the agreement for successive periods of 30 years each," the prospectus says.

The JOA between the Globe and the Post-Dispatch was begun March 1, 1961, before JOAs were given federal endorsement with the enactment of the Newspaper Preservation Act of 1970.

From 1961 until 1979, the two papers shared only their production operations, which were performed by Pulitzer. After 1979, Pulitzer also assumed responsibility for all business operations of both papers.

The JOA was amended again in 1984 after Newhouse sold the Globe. — Mark Fitzgerald

Poly bags used as lifesavers

AKRON (OHIO) BEACON Journal orange poly newspaper bags are finding new lives giving cancer patients hope for new life.

An Ohio medical supplier has discovered that the Beacon Journal's plastic newspaper sleeves are the perfect size for head and neck supports that can be customized for individual patients receiving radiation treatment.

Since the discovery, the oncology department at Duke University in Durham, N.C., has used the bags as part of a device that ensures radiation treatment is applied with pinpoint precision.

The unlikely role for the foul-weather poly bags was discovered when the Duke cancer treatment department asked Smithers Medical Products Inc. of Tallmadge, Ohio, to develop a neck support that could be customized to each patient.

Finding the proper support to keep patients still is important because the smallest movement could result in missing cancerous tissue while permanently damaging a healthy area with radiation.

As Smithers president Jeffrey Kostich was pondering the request, he happened to notice that the poly bag for that day's Beacon Journal appeared to be a perfect size for a support device.

A Smithers employee asked the newspaper if it could spare a few extra bags for experiments.

Carol Eubank, administrative assistant in research and promotion at the Beacon Journal, arranged to send over 100 poly bags and sent another 200 to Duke's cancer department.

The support device works this way: A medical technician places the poly bag under a patient's neck and fills the bag with a warm foam, which then expands and hardens to form a mold. A mold made from the sleeves can be used for repeated treatments, Kostich told the Beacon Journal.

He said some Duke technicians claim to be able to apply treatment to within one or two millimeters of the center of the targeted tissue, an extraordinary degree of accuracy.

Up-to-date and on-the-go without paper

by Jim Rosenberg

PUBLISHER TODD CHRONIS wanted to attend Nexpo 93 but settled for PC Expo later the same month. If he makes Nexpo 94, Chronis will not be shopping for RIPs or recorders, presses or inserters.

Planning, partnering, sometimes bickering, numerous media, technology and entertainment corporations are slowly turning their big ships to headings they hope point to a profitable future. Meanwhile, lighter, faster craft have already sailed into the as-yet-uncharted waters.

While newspaper companies analyze new media and new information delivery options, the future is now for two technology firms already delivering news by wired and wireless networks to users of personal computers/communicators. Both small companies are run by the young computer professionals who started them.

One, RadioMail Corp. of San Mateo, Calif., last month began transmitting news on demand to portable platforms in more than 6,000 U.S. cities over packet radio networks.

The other, WalkSoft Corp. of Rochester, N.Y., downloads a multimedia newspaper in 10 minutes to any Macintosh or Windows PC in North America over the existing telephone network.

In addition to Dow Jones averages, RadioMail's NewsFactory supplies headlines and summaries of general world and national news, domestic and international business news and sports news gathered from UPI, Business Wire, PR NewsWire, Deutsche Press-Agentur, Kyodo, Tass, Pacific Rim News Network and other sources. Reports are updated as news breaks; the Dow is updated every 30 minutes during market hours.

RadioMail chairman Geoffrey S. Goodfellow said news selections are made by a combination of computer program, which clips off and sends out the headlines, and a human editor, who chooses the news items to be included.

"We're going to try to find out what the user wants because we don't know," Goodfellow conceded. So far, he added, "The users love it and what they want is more news," particularly stock quotes and the ability to watch specific companies.

A 44-page printout of a July 2 mid-afternoon NewsFactory report comprised 20 long "headlines" followed by corresponding two-paragraph briefs, equally divided between general and business news. The report relied heavily on UPI for general and business news, domestic and foreign, with items also from DPA, PR Newswire and Business Wire.

According to RadioMail, NewsFactory grew out of its earlier service that supplied headlines only to users of one-way pagers. The company said this is the first of several wireless information services it plans for the next several years. Others include wireless fax and voice mail.

The news can be called up on radio modem-equipped DOS-based notebooks, Apple PowerBooks, Hewlett-Packard palmtops and any other portable computer supporting RadioMail.

"The industry right now is where the cellular telephone industry was 10 years ago," said Goodfellow. Though not necessarily offering continually updated news, other companies will soon compete with RadioMail as e-mail gateway providers, among them AT&T, through its EasyLink Services.

Goodfellow dropped out of high school 20 years ago to devote more time to computers, his principal interest. He took a job with SRI International and eventually began exploring the nascent wireless communications technologies that produced the first large and expensive cellular phones.

By the time text-receiving pagers were introduced, Goodfellow had risen to researcher at SRI, where he developed a software gateway to translate and route e-mail between SRI's computer and the alphanumeric paging network. Five years ago, he began RadioMail at his home, using a NeXT workstation to provide a gateway for paging network subscribers to message subscribers on other networks.

Last October, his company began full e-mail service. In April, RadioMail received its first outside funding — a combined $3 million invested by Motorola and a Danish group led by Michael Mathiesen, a founder of Scanview, maker of compact tabletop color drum scanners. William Hipp, former head of another Mathiesen company's U.S. subsidiary, now serves as RadioMail president.

In April, Mobile Data Report said Mathiesen wants to help take the company's business international once RadioMail establishes itself in the U.S.

RadioMail now counts 1,500 subscribers. Among them, Goodfellow listed bankers, a public utility, journalists, technology buffs and professionals, industry analysts and consultants.

NewsFactory is a free additional service for subscribers to RadioMail's $89-a-month electronic mail service and has the same user interface. The monthly fee includes any amount of network connection time, according to Goodfellow. He likened his electronic news-with-mail service to basic cable television, which eventually included CNN Headline News at no extra charge.

The news can be called up on radio modem-equipped DOS-based notebooks, Apple PowerBooks, Hewlett-Packard palmtops and any other portable computer supporting RadioMail.

RadioMail assigns subscriber Radio Mailboxes at its computer center for two-way transmissions over the RAM Mobile Data (E&P, July 25, P. 10) and ARDIS two-way wireless networks. Subscribers can also connect to various networks, including corporate mail and public access systems, as well as the worldwide Internet.

The ARDIS wireless network is operated by IBM and Motorola, but RadioMail maintains that its success depends on its favoring no single network, despite Motorola's stake in the company and presence on its board. As for IBM, the San Jose (Calif.) Mercury News reported in May that it would likely soon strike a marketing deal with RadioMail.

If NewsFactory is improved, savable, on-demand news radio without the radio tuner, News In Motion is a full-featured, full-color, multimedia world news newspaper without the paper.

Slated to launch today as a weekly and to become a daily later this year, the on-line newspaper carries news, opinion, some sports and entertainment in an easily selectable and readable, attractively illustrated and animated format that includes sound when appropriate.

News In Motion is the creation of WalkSoft founder Todd Chronis, an MIT-trained physicist who began his career as a software developer 10 years ago with Xerox Corp.

Now 35, Chronis funded the year-old WalkSoft and his international multimedia newspaper with proceeds from the sale of an earlier marketing software start-up, SalesBook Systems.

He previewed News In Motion last month at New York's PC Expo, where he stressed two attributes of his publication: support from neither advertising nor venture capital and perspectives supplied by various worldwide news-reporting sources.

"We're not taking advertising at this time," said Chronis, "so we have no one to offend."

"I'm sort of fortunate that one of my editors speaks French, German and Italian," he said.

Text sources include the Economist, Le Monde, International Herald Tribune, Financial Times, Corriere della Sera, Der Spiegel, L'Express, Asahi Shimbun, Jane's Defense Weekly and various news wires. Pictures are from Agence France-Presse and Reuters.

Features include syndicated columnists, crosswords, political cartoons and comics developed by WalkSoft artists, horoscopes and a children's page.

"We're not going to lose sight of the fact that newspapers are supposed to be entertaining," said Chronis. Cartoons, comics and horoscopes are vehicles for the paper's animation and sound capabilities. Another feature, the Frugal Gourmet, "will accumulate on your desk, and, essentially, you'll get a cookbook," said Chronis.

As a weekly, News In Motion receives AFP news photos as color slides by overnight courier, scanning and correcting them for optimum screen display — something it is unable to do with AFP images scanned specifically for newspaper printing.

When asked about work at Knight-Ridder's Information Design Lab, he replied, "They're studying it; I'm doing it."

He later added that if and when advertising is accepted, "We're probably going to attract more IHT-type and Economist-type classified than consumer products ads."

He said his on-screen paper will try to provoke and stimulate users through selection of reporting sources — for example, presenting side-by-side coverage of the same story in Germany by reporters from German and French publications. Also, the same or other publications' accounts of events in Bosnia might be used to round out coverage from U.S. news outlets.

Chronis emphasized that he has not joined the Associated Press and does not want to rely on the same four to six top AP stories carried by most AP-member U.S. dailies.

He said he hoped that News In Motion's wide-ranging reporting sources will help subscribers get a better idea of what others are thinking by reading what they are reading.

Reporting from other publications will be added gradually, said Chronis, who added that his paper's editing staff handles its own translations.

"If we did that off PressLink," said Chronis, "it wouldn't look good."

Reuters photos are also available over Knight-Ridder's PressLink dial-up service, from which they will be downloaded as an occasional supplementary source.

When News In Motion goes daily, however, Chronis said, it will rely on AFP's satellite photo feed, trading some image quality for timely news-photo content. At that time, the newspaper will also receive the Reuters text feed and, possibly, a similar service from the Washington Post.

Chronis dismissed others' ventures into similar areas. Of newspapers providing reports over on-line services, he remarked, "Papers shouldn't just do text."

When asked about work at Knight-Ridder's Information Design Lab, he replied, "They're studying it; I'm doing it."

Compared with major publishing organizations, Chronis (who said his new business cards will say "publisher" instead of "president") said his "small entrepreneurial company . . . can quickly react to market trends and technology changes."

Customer comments and beta test sites will be used to judge interest in specific sections and make improvements, according to WalkSoft.

Chronis said his newspaper is not waiting for improved technologies "because they always get better." He said News In Motion will adopt technical advances where appropriate. "In a sense," he said, "we're a test bed for the industry."

A few booths away from WalkSoft in the jammed Javits Convention Center, Adobe Systems showed the first finished version of its Acrobat platform-independent document-exchange software. The product, the publishing implications of which reach far beyond easily shared viewing of formatted materials, may well be the embryo of a standard for future information distribution and handling.

For now, however, Chronis dismisses that too, calling it slow at handling other than letter-size pages and designed for documents ultimately meant to be printed — both points that the folks at Adobe might dispute.

Acrobat, said Chronis, "would be exactly the right thing for us if we were to be downloaded and printed." For his newspaper, Chronis supplies subscribers with custom software for their personal computers.

News In Motion transmits at midnight Saturday from a central server with a scalable architecture suitable for future expansion as needed. (For the unconnected, diskettes go out Friday evening.) Downloaded and onto the subscriber's hard disk, the paper is ready for Saturday morning reading-viewing-listening at the click of the mouse.

Icons call up the paper and each section, which can be viewed and "paged through" like a newspaper. Clicking on another icon calls up a story, which can then be scrolled in screenwide display. Story leads are accompanied by a thumbnail photo. Clicking on it, the user views a full-size, full-resolution color picture.

News In Motion currently downloads to 80386sx or better PCs running Windows 3.1, with at least 4MB RAM, VGA graphics and a 2400-baud modem. The Macintosh version to come later in the year requires the same minimum memory and modem and System 6.7 or higher.

Subscriptions to the weekly range from $30 for four issues to $250 for a year. Prices include toll-free service for 9,600- or 14,400-baud connections. ■E&P

Time on line

WEEKLY NEWS MAGAZINE Time will become available electronically in September to computer users who subscribe to America Online.

The on-line magazine will carry the full text of each weekly edition but no photos or graphics, which may be provided at a later date. No advertising will be included.

The Vienna, Va.-based service already carries electronic versions of the Chicago Tribune and San Jose (Calif.) Mercury News. Like the latter's Mercury Center, the electronic edition of Time will permit subscribers to communicate with reporters and editors. Its subscribers also will be able to join on-line conferences with newsmakers.

Though not on line, Time competitor Newsweek has offered quarterly multimedia editions on read-only compact disks since last year.

RNI plant wins national award

RICHMOND NEWSPAPERS INC. won first place in the over-$25 million industrial category in the Associated Builders and Contractors' National Excellence in Construction awards.

For its year-old, $171 million Hanover County, Va., plant, the Media General affiliate shared the award with BE&K, the Alabama-based construction firm that supervised the project.

Awards program entries were judged according to project complexity, attractiveness, unusual challenges, completion time, safety and budget. The same new plant also won top awards from the Associated General Contractors of America and the Construction Management Association of America.

The project faced environmental challenges in siting, design and operation. Wetlands protection was accomplished by controlling runoff and adding flood retention ponds stocked with aquatic plant life.

Sight and sound barriers were erected. Lighting is aimed down and into specific areas. Irrigation of the extensively landscaped grounds relies on a computerized weather station.

The building's design takes into account control of sunlight and heat. Energy consumption is conserved by a computer-driven HVAC management system, lighting automation and use of standby diesel generators.

The main fuel is natural gas. Secondary fuel oil is sealed in a concrete vault with leak detection. The gasoline supply surpasses specified Stage I vapor recovery by returning fuel tank emissions to double-walled storage tanks that rest in a covered clay-lined vault.

Waste ink is reclaimed for later use; newsprint waste and circulation returns are baled for sale to recyclers. More than half the newsprint used is made entirely from recycled fibers.

Denver daily tab in four sections

ROCKY MOUNTAIN NEWS readers have been able to share four easily separable sections of the tabloid, thanks to what was reportedly one of publisher Larry Strutton's first ideas upon returning to his hometown.

The now more colorful all-offset paper preprints and winds inside sections onto Ferag Variodiscs until the main news jacket is sent on line to inserters.

The stored sections are then unwound and conveyed to the inserters, where they are stacked within the main section. Because they are stacked, the inserted sections are more easily removed — often a challenge with tabloids, which lack the extra fold that allows broadsheets to be easily packaged into discrete nested sections.

Called News to Share, the reconfigured paper made its debut March 29, with main news, sports, Spotlight (lifestyles and entertainment) and classified sections. News spokeswoman Nancy Murray said the idea was well received by readers.

Among other focus-group requests now in the paper, she said, are page-two summaries indexed to major stories, Top of the News on the next page, with the day's most important local, national and international stories, local news running in the beginning of the paper and a business section anchored daily at the back of the main news one.

Media Groups Object to Closed Senate Meeting

FOLLOWING THREE DAYS of public hearings, the Senate Judiciary Committee met briefly behind closed doors with Supreme Court nominee Judge Ruth Bader Ginsburg, much to the chagrin of journalists.

The move prompted at least four media organizations to object in letters to committee chairman Sen. Joseph R. Biden (D-Del.).

American Society of Newspaper Editors president William A. Hilliard, editor of the Portland Oregonian, wrote, "Democratic self-government and an informed citizenry go hand in hand making essential the conduct of public business in the open. How else can the American public judge whether government decisions are proper?

"The Judiciary Committee's closing of any part of these hearings will only breed suspicion on the part of the public that the Senate's retreat behind the wall of secrecy is driven by the desire to hide essential facts from the public," Hilliard added.

Jane E. Kirtley, executive director of the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, and David Bartlett, president of the Radio-Television News Directors Association, sent a joint letter to Biden on behalf of their organizations.

Sen. Joseph Biden ignored the media plea.

Calling the move "both ill-advised and impractical," their letter pointed out that if "problems of public perception exist about the integrity of the confirmation process, they will not be alleviated by proceeding behind closed doors."

Kirtley and Bartlett also noted that "conducting these proceedings under a confidentiality rule that will supposedly bind all senators is a recipe for disaster. Leaks are endemic in government, and organizing witch hunts to uncover their source is anathema to a free society."

The Society of Professional Journalists also sent a letter of protest to Biden. Signed by Lucy Dalglish, chairwoman of the SPJ Freedom of Information Committee, and Henry Hoberman, SPJ counsel, the letter said the closed hearing "will only serve to reinforce public perception of the infirmities in the process.

"The blanket rule you have implemented, based on hypothetical concerns about non-existent issues in the case of Judge Ginsburg, ignores the built-in requirement of Senate Rule 26 that each committee balance, on a case-by-case basis, the public's right to be informed about the work of its representatives with individual private interests." ■E&P

Boston Globe union eyes contract, affiliation

LEADERS OF THE Boston Globe Employees Association—after working more than two years without a contract—want to adopt a big brother: the Newspaper Guild.

The governing board of the Boston Globe's in-house union voted unanimously for Guild affiliation in June, just days after the New York Times Co.'s $1.1 billion deal to buy Globe corporate parent Affiliated Publications Inc. No vote has been scheduled.

Instead, the 1,100-member union is focusing on a new contract proposal, scheduled for a membership vote Aug. 19.

Union leaders and management are remaining neutral on the Globe's "amended final offer" of a three-year contract. It includes many terms—lower wage scales for new hires and subcontracting in return for lifetime job guarantees and raises over 9%—contained in the "final offer" that union members overwhelmingly rejected last September. The Globe declared an impasse and implemented the terms anyway.

The new contract proposal retains the union's no-layoff clause for full-time employees hired before 1992.

Only this time, management has promised that if the union rejects the three-year pact, the Globe will withdraw the offers of lifetime job guarantees for current full-time workers, pretax deductions for health care, and company contributions of $98,000 to the union health fund.

Press-rights groups join suit against public college

Support man seeking access to sex-education films under the Freedom of Information Law

by Debra Gersh

DEMONSTRATING THAT WHILE they may disagree with what someone says, they will fight for his right to say it, two press-rights legal groups have filed court papers in support of a man seeking access to college sex-education films he believes may be inappropriate.

The Student Press Law Center (SPLC) and the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press (RCFP), both based in Washington have filed an amici curiae (friends of the court) brief with New York state's highest court, the Court of Appeals.

The two groups are supporting the petition of Frank J. Russo, a Long Island man who heads a group called Citizens for a More Informed America. Russo has invoked the state's Freedom of Information Law (FoIL) to argue for his right to inspect a film and other materials used in a human sexuality course taught at Nassau Community College.

According to a report in Newsday, Russo's group criticized the class after learning that a sexually explicit film was shown as part of the course, even though neither Russo nor other citizens who joined him have seen the film.

College officials declined Russo's request to view the material, spawning the court action in 1990.

Russo argued that because the college is a state institution, New York's FoIL applies to the course materials, which should be considered records under the law.

The trial court agreed with Russo, but the college prevailed on appeal.

"For journalists who cover the activities of taxpayer-supported colleges and universities, especially those who write for campus publications, the statutory right of access to a broad range of records maintained by a school is crucial to their ability to effectively report the news," the SPLC and RCFP brief said.

"A court ruling that public educational institutions, in whole or in part, are exempted from the requirements of FoIL would seriously impinge on the public's right to know," it stated.

"Public access to teaching materials used at a public, tax-supported college is fully consistent with the legislative intent behind FoIL."

Although the appellate court found that it was possible to divide public colleges and universities into separate arms — one the public agency subject to FoIL and the other an academic institution — the amici brief notes that the law not only does not suggest they be divided but that it would be unworkable.

"Academic activity is the business for which an educational institution is created," it said. "To deny citizens the information necessary to determine how that institution is fulfilling its obligation to educate or to limit the inquiry to administrative or bookkeeping matters effectively prevents public oversight of the schools they support."

The SPLC and RCFP also pointed out, "Public access to teaching materials used at a public, tax-supported college is fully consistent with the legislative intent behind FoIL."

They maintained, "The public's right of access is not only desirable, it may often be necessary . . . . It is not sufficient, as the Legislature has already determined, to place the important task of oversight exclusively in the hands of administrators of public institutions."

Although the college argued that Russo could obtain the film through other sources — from the distributor, for a fee or by enrolling in the class — the SPLC and RCFP brief maintained the court should reject that argument.

"The possibility that material held by the government may be available elsewhere, or even from another component of the government, should not allow government agencies to refuse to disclose information and materials they hold," it stated. "Nor should New York taxpayers seeking access to such materials be forced to expend time on scavenger expeditions to obtain government information."

Further, the press groups argued against the college's assertion that it has a First Amendment right to academic freedom that is in conflict with FoIL.

"The fact that [Russo] seeks access only to course materials held by the college and not to any materials held by individual faculty members undermines the [college's] claim of First Amendment academic freedom protection.

"As history tells us, the Bill of Rights was adopted to safeguard the rights of individuals from intrusion by the government. It was not, as [the college] would suggest, intended to be used by the government as a shield from the public."

As a private citizen, Russo does not have the right to influence the workings of the college — hiring or firing faculty, approving or rejecting coursework, accepting or rejecting students for enrollment, the brief pointed out.

"Like any other member of the public, however, his right to disagree with how his tax dollars are spent at a public institution is limited to a right to voice that disagreement, both publicly and at the ballot box . . .," it stated.

"The college might experience some public pressure in the future were the contents of its course materials disclosed pursuant to FoIL. But the possibility of such pressure does not rise to the level of a cognizable First Amendment claim," the SPLC and RCFP argued.

In addition, "The college's claim that the application of FoIL to its course materials would violate its right to academic freedom must be rejected as too indirect, attenuated, remote and speculative for recognition under the First Amendment."

Mark Goodman, executive director of the SPLC, agreed that it is somewhat ironic for him to be arguing against someone claiming a First Amendment right.

He added, however, that this case is not about academic freedom but about whether the community college is covered by the state open records law, a key issue for student and professional journalists.

The appellate court's finding that the college could withhold the material because it could be obtained elsewhere also prompted the amici brief, Goodman explained.

"From any reporter's perspective, that is devastating," he said. "If you could jump through enough hoops or pay enough money, you should be able to get them — simply because the court created that as a potential exemption is troubling."

Goodman pointed out that the state Legislature could have included that clause as an exemption to the law, but it did not.

"The court does not have the authority to rewrite state law. If it did, the implications would be to make the law virtually ineffective."

In addition, Goodman added, he believes Russo has been unsuccessful in attempts to get a copy of the film from the distributor.

Goodman speculated that some of the trouble could stem from who Russo is and the nature of his organization, reportedly a conservative group holding religious-based philosophical disagreements with the college.

"A lot of people disagree with that, but the point is, it doesn't matter who he is," Goodman said. "He could be Adolf Hitler, but the law says he has the right to see the information." ■E&P

Ex-circulation supervisor guilty of sex abuse

by Kathryn Keatley Garvey

A FORMER CIRCULATION supervisor for the Reporter of Vacaville, Calif., has been found guilty of sexually molesting two employees who sold subscriptions and delivered newspapers for him. He faces up to 39 years in state prison.

Louis Donald "Joe" Mendonsa, 30, was charged with 12 felony counts and six misdemeanor counts involving eight youths, ages 13 to 16, who worked for him during the summer of 1992.

The jury found him guilty of 12 felony counts but cited lack of evidence in acquitting him of the six misdemeanor charges of sexual misconduct.

Eleven of the 12 felonies involved a 13-year-old boy, whom the jury unanimously agreed was fondled and orally copulated. The 12th count involved a 16-year-old boy who was folding fliers in Mendonsa's home.

Mendonsa was found guilty of lewd and lascivious conduct. The 16-year-old boy testified that Mendonsa played a pornographic movie, stripped and then tried to coerce him into having oral sex.

The Reporter published the verdict on the front page.

The seven-day trial drew widespread publicity in upper Solano County. Both the Reporter and the Daily Republic in Fairfield, competing daily newspapers with a 10-mile range, ran daily accounts of the testimony.

Mendonsa, who was fired from his job after his arrest, denied he molested the boys. He said he often patted his employees on the knee or shoulder as means of encouragement but said he did nothing that he "wouldn't do in the normal practice with my crew kids."

Mendonsa said he owned a porno movie but said he did not play it for the 16-year-old boy, never stripped and never asked for oral sex.

The Daily Republic ran a five-column story on the verdict on its Solano Scene section. Reporter Pamela Martineau described the 13-year-old victim as having a "learning disability" and identified his stepfather and mother by name. ■E&P

Journalist apologizes to Schwarzenegger

ARNOLD SCHWARZENEGGER won in the courtroom when an English journalist apologized for an article that called him an admirer of Adolf Hitler.

Lawyers for Wendy Leigh told a London court that their client was withdrawing the untrue allegations printed in the tabloid News of the World in February 1988. Leigh also agreed to pay the 45-year-old Austrian substantial undisclosed damages and legal costs. Schwarzenegger has agreed to drop the case.

The front-page article, with the headline "Hollywood Star's Nazi Secret," was based on material provided by Leigh, who was writing an unauthorized biography of the actor at the time. Included in the story were allegations that Schwarzenegger admired the Nazi philosophy, was anti-Semitic and approved of his father's "alleged conduct in rounding up Jews and homosexuals who were tortured and murdered in Nazi concentration camps," Martin Kramer, the actor's lawyer, told the court.

In reality, Kramer said, Schwarzenegger, a Republican who was chairman of the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports during the Bush administration, is "an active supporter of Jewish charities in the U.S. and a friend and supporter of Nazi hunter Simon Wiesenthal."

Leigh's lawyer said the writer later had doubts about her information, but she thought the paper would confirm the material before publishing it. (Leigh now says there "was not a word of truth" in the article.)

Schwarzenegger settled a separate libel action against the News of the World over the allegations in December 1989. — Presslink

A story about what storytelling can do

Convention speaker discusses how columnists can use storytelling techniques to improve their writing

by David Astor

LOIS AND CLARK sprinted toward the hotel meeting room, still clutching the suitcases they had carried off their Covered Wagon Airlines flight less than 45 minutes before.

They had to make the session on time. Missing even one word, the columnists feared, meant unemployment. They reached the room — and it was locked! On the door was a sign stating, "No admission while meeting is in progress." The discussion of storytelling techniques must have already begun.

Lois and Clark slumped to the floor, wondering if the trip to Portland, Ore., had been in vain. The columnists' minds trailed off into thoughts of that morning, when their editorial page editor had issued an ultimatum that hit with the force of a Clyde Drexler slam dunk.

"You're good people," Douglas Fir told them as he adjusted his green eyeshade. "Your columns have exposed corruption and helped our citizens, but they read more like news stories than columns. Yes, they're boring! If the columns you write today don't bring in 10,000 new readers, our publisher has vowed to fold the Sun and buy a cable TV station."

The columnists shuddered. Would Willa Mette-River really close their newspaper? Could they immediately improve their writing enough to save it?

Suddenly, they remembered that the National Society of Newspaper Columnists (NSNC) was holding a convention in Portland that day that included a session on how good storytelling techniques could make columns more attractive to readers. Lois and Clark vowed to go west before the Sun set.

Jack Hart

Now they were out West, sitting helplessly in front of a locked meeting room.

"We're dead," moaned Clark, feeling bluer than his VDT's letters. "Kaput. 'Thirty.' We might as well walk to Printing Press Park and bury ourselves."

Lois struggled to her feet. "Are we crusading columnists or wimps? Sign or no sign, we should at least try knocking. Maybe they'll still let us in."

She rapped on the door, which opened a few seconds later.

"Yes?" said a man.

"We need to hear about storytelling techniques. Can we still come in?"

"Storytelling techniques? This is a meeting of the 'Coalition to Snap Better Photos of Mount Hood From Planes Approaching Portland Airport.' You have the wrong room."

Lois and Clark gasped, ran toward the correct room, heard the NSNC storytelling session and filed spectacular columns over the modem that attracted 10,001 new Sun subscribers the next day. The Lois and Clark Expedition had succeeded.

The above piece of abbreviated and rather silly fiction, which E&P takes full blame for creating, illustrates several of the storytelling techniques that real-life NSNC convention-goers were urged to try in their columns.

Speaker Jack Hart told the Portland attendees that good nonfiction stories often feature protagonists confronted with some sort of "complicating situation." They then face obstacles, even near-failures, before succeeding.

Good stories, continued the Portland Oregonian staff development director/writing coach, often "start in the middle of the action to pull you in and then circle back later to pick up the necessary history." In addition, they contain actual scenes along with narrative summary. Good stories can include humor, too.

Hart said only a small percentage of columns use these and other storytelling techniques. A major reason for this, he said, is many columnists are former reporters who grew accustomed to doing relatively straightforward articles with inverted-pyramid structures.

"Journalists traditionally spend more time on story-getting than storytelling," commented Hart. "They don't have the training or the background, at least early in their careers, to understand the true principles of storytelling."

In fact, said the NSNC speaker, newspaper articles often focus on "story endings" rather than whole stories.

Hart noted that one way columnists can find storytelling subjects is to read a basic newspaper article and then investigate whether there is some sort of engrossing story that led to the resolution reported in the article.

"Great stories don't just happen," he remarked. "You have to look for them."

Straight newspaper articles, stated Hart, "generally don't entertain, reveal basic human truths or produce any emotional impact." Movies, TV shows and even electronic games often do these things better than newspapers, he said.

"Virtually all of our competitors are masters of true storytelling," declared Hart. "They're kicking our butts."

Hart emphasized that many columnists already do a good job. "They give a newspaper personality," he said. "They contribute 'voice,' which is sadly lacking in American journalism."

However, Hart added that columnists could do even better if they used more storytelling techniques, which he said are "appropriate to the column format."

Hart said one columnist who excels in storytelling is the Oregonian's Phil Stanford. Hart cited a gripping series Stanford wrote about the efforts of two women to prove that a neighbor was molesting children.

"True stories, told as stories, have a tremendous power to engage our imagination," he said.

In the article-writing area, Hart praised people such as the Oregonian's Spencer Heinz, the St. Petersburg (Fla.) Times' Tom French, the Wall Street Journal's Bill Blundell and the Philadelphia Inquirer's Donald Barlett and James Steele. He said the latter team's famous "America: What Went Wrong" series was helped greatly by its storytelling aspects.

Hart also mentioned Truman Capote, Norman Mailer, Gay Talese and Tom Wolfe as other examples of accomplished storytellers.

Wolfe's New Journalism was one of nine books on a storytelling bibliography that Hart supplied to the NSNC audience. Another book was Writing for Story by Jon Franklin, who won two Pulitzer Prizes as a Baltimore Sun staffer. Hart drew on a number of Franklin's ideas for his talk.

Hart emphasized that storytelling is not something that should be used in all columns. He noted, for instance, that it would not be particularly appropriate for the "Writer's Workshop" feature he does for E&P.

Another Oregonian staffer, editorial cartoonist Jack Ohman, also spoke at the NSNC convention about column writing as well as his own craft.

The Tribune Media Services (TMS) creator humorously described several kinds of columns he often sees.

Ohman said one is the "weepy" column that states, "It's a sad commentary when . . ." — as in, "It's a sad commentary when a city this size doesn't have an intensive-care unit designed to treat Little League injuries."

Another kind of feature, continued Ohman, is "the Royko-type column that exposes corruption in government entities the average reader doesn't know exist." Mike Royko is a columnist for the Chicago Tribune and TMS.

Ohman later mentioned a second TMS columnist, Dave Barry, and the upcoming Dave's World TV show based on the humorist's life. Ohman wondered whether such Barry phrases as "bat urine" would make it past the CBS censors.

The editorial cartoonist also spoke about the clichéd nature of the columns by liberals who describe receiving a conservative Republican mailing by mistake and proceed to defend liberal principles.

Then, said Ohman, there is the irony of government officials using political columnists as "whipping posts" and then writing syndicated features themselves after leaving office. One new pundit mentioned by the speaker is former Secretary of State James Baker, who signed recently with the Los Angeles Times Syndicate.

Ohman went on to sketch caricatures of a number of politicians and other public figures, including Bill Clinton, Hillary Rodham Clinton, Al Gore, Bob Dole, Bob Packwood, Ted Kennedy, Jesse Jackson, Ross Perot, George Bush, Ronald Reagan and Richard Nixon. He also drew caricatures of himself and several columnists in the audience.

The editorial cartoonist was introduced by Oregonian president and publisher Fred Stickel, who hurled some mock insults in Ohman's direction.

Stickel observed, for instance, that Ohman "is a great believer in recycling . . . . He recycles Nancy Reagan cartoons into Hillary Clinton cartoons."

Another Oregonian staffer, columnist Jonathan Nicholas, was publicly praised by a number of NSNC members for hosting the best convention in the organization's history. The Portland meeting (also covered in E&P, July 3, 10, 17 and 24) marked the 16th year of the NSNC, which has more than 130 members. ■E&P Ripped off 'Zippy'?

BILL GRIFFITH HAS been commenting in "Zippy the Pinhead" about how the Coneheads film may be partially based on his comic.

"Zippy," which is now distributed by King Features Syndicate, started as an underground comic several years before the mid-1970s debut of Saturday Night Live. Also, the late John Belushi was a big "Zippy" fan.

The SNL "Coneheads" sketches inspired the recently released movie starring Dan Aykroyd and Jane Curtin.

'Showbiz' is offered

A COLUMN CALLED "That's Showbiz" is being added to the Los Angeles Times Syndicate's Entertainment News Service.

The feature is written by Richard Natale, who has been on the Hollywood beat for more than a decade. He has served as entertainment editor for the Los Angeles Herald Examiner and L.A. Style magazine and as a staff reporter for Variety and the Hollywood Reporter.

Lurie in 'Guinness'

RANAN LURIE AGAIN made the Guinness Book of World Records as the most widely syndicated political cartoonist.

The book stated that Lurie appears in 1,018 newspapers with a circulation of 85 million in 79 countries.

Lurie's client list nearly doubled last fall after he signed an agreement with the Tass news agency to run in nearly 500 former Soviet Union papers.

Most of his work is syndicated by Cartoonews International. Lurie also draws caricatures that accompany the Mikhail Gorbachev column distributed by the New York Times Syndicate.

Guinness said "Peanuts" creator Charles Schulz of United Feature Syndicate was again the most widely syndicated comic strip creator, with 2,300 newspapers in 68 countries and 26 languages.

And Ann Landers of the Chicago Tribune and Creators Syndicate was again the most widely distributed columnist, with more than 1,200 newspapers and an estimated readership of 90 million.

Zippy, and his head, make a point.

Back in syndication

POLITICAL WRITER MICHAEL Kinsley is resuming his United Feature Syndicate-distributed "TRB" column for the New Republic magazine after a six-month leave to author a book.

During his sabbatical, Kinsley continued to write essays for Time magazine and appear on CNN's Crossfire program.

News about awards

THREE PEOPLE FROM syndicated packages recently received awards.

Ro Logrippo, co-creator of the "In My Room" feature in Universal Press Syndicate's "Primary Color" home package, won two first-place awards in the National Federation of Press Women's communications contest. Her column partner, Antonio F. Torrice, died in October.

Also, writers Steven Raichlan and Joyce Goldstein of the Los Angeles Times Syndicate's "FoodStyles" package were named Beard Award winners.

Massive sales effort

AN UNUSUALLY BIG sales campaign has begun for political cartoonist Geoffrey Yerke.

His Geoffrey Features (GF) syndicate is sending out direct-mail pieces to more than 6,000 daily and weekly newspapers in the United States.

Yerke said each editor will receive three color postcards (on successive days) featuring drawings of Bill Clinton, Ross Perot and Rush Limbaugh. A brochure and cartoons will follow.

When asked how such a massive effort is being funded, Yerke said he is using earnings from his cartoons (which already appear in more than 30 papers), his free-lance illustration work and other sources.

Yerke — who describes himself as a cartoonist who makes "bipartisan attacks" — is a Marquette University graduate with degrees in international affairs, global economics, Soviet studies and philosophy. He has traveled widely through Europe, taught English in the impoverished barrios of Mexico City, counseled inner-city kids in Chicago and worked as an ironworker in California. Yerke currently coordinates an academics/sports program in Milwaukee.

GF is based at 13500 Watertown Plank Rd., Suite L107, Elm Grove, Wis. 53122.

ship of Jorge Ubico. A reformer Juan José Arévalo was elected president and was succeeded in 1951 by Col. Jacobo Arbenz, who harbored Marxist sentiments. The elected Arbenz was toppled in 1954 by a CIA-engineered military coup, which ushered in 32 years of military-dominated regimes characterized by fraudulent elections and challenged by a left-wing insurgency.

About 40 journalists were murdered in the 1960s and 1970s, either by guerrillas or right-wing extremists. Zarco's father, Isidoro, like García a cofounder of Prensa Libre, was assassinated by guerrillas in 1970.

The second period of press freedom began with the inauguration of Vinicio Cerezo, a Christian Democrat, in 1986.

Serrano, an engineer who did postgraduate work at Stanford, led a field of 12 candidates and received 68% of the vote in the 1991 runoff despite the fact that he was an evangelical Protestant in a predominantly Roman Catholic country.

When Cerezo handed the presidential sash over to Serrano in 1991, it marked the first time in the country's history that one elected civilian had replaced another, raising hopes for genuine democracy that were temporarily dampened by Serrano's suspension of the constitution.

"It was a throwback to the worst of the dictatorial strongman type of action," said IAPA executive director Bill Williamson. "We sent two missions there this year, and Serrano promised both of them that investigations would be carried out into some unjust violence against journalists and that he would respect constitutional guarantees and international treaties guaranteeing freedom of expression. He broke both promises."

However, June 1, the military forced Serrano to resign, and he has gone into exile in Panama. At first, it appeared that his defense minister, Gen. José Domingo García Samayoa, would emerge as the new president, sending a chill through a country weary and wary of strongmen in uniform. Then Serrano's vice president, Gustavo Espina, made an abortive claim to the presidency.

Finally, June 5, the elected congress chose de Leon, the country's top human rights official, who had escaped house arrest during Serrano's suspension of guarantees, to be president. He quickly restored press freedom and fired military hard-liners who had supported Serrano's coup.

"The Guatemalan press did a very good job under trying circumstances," Williamson said, "and it appears that there is a happy ending." ■E&P

Scholarship winner

NOAH ADDIS OF Columbus, N.J., has been awarded the 1993 Bob Baxter Scholarship of $1,000 to study press photography at Drexel University, Philadelphia.

Since its inception in 1980, the scholarship has financially assisted more than 20 students in their photographic studies.

The scholarship, administered by N.J. Newsphotos, Newark, was named for a former news photographer.

Chicago Tribune architectural contest winners

A TEAM OF three designers from North Dakota State University in Fargo won the Chicago Tribune Architecture Competition to redesign Chicago's Cabrini-Green public housing project.

Two assistant architecture professors — Don C. Faulkner and Jim W. Nelson — and a recent North Dakota bachelor of architecture graduate, Larry Carcoana, formed the team that won the "ideas competition."

Their design proposed turning Cabrini-Greene — now a fear-inducing island of poverty seemingly dropped in the middle of a prosperous area — into a traditional Chicago neighborhood of rowhouses, parks, schools, churches and even a public marina along the Chicago River.

Like several other designs, the North Dakota team would realign Cabrini's present maze of isolated streets into the city's grid system.

Unlike the Tribune's famous 1922 architecture contest — which resulted in the landmark Gothic-inspired Tribune Tower — the winning entry will not be built or awarded any prize. Instead, the contest was intended to stir up ideas about public housing.

The contest was dedicated to the memory of Dantrell Davis, a 7-year-old Cabrini resident who was shot to death by a sniper as he walked to school with his mother (E&P, Feb. 27, 1993, P. 11).

and black [colleagues] that you're not a one-issue columnist."

Noting that managers tend to "promote people in their own image," González said it is "difficult to maintain your viewpoint and maintain your vision, [but] if you persevere and stick to where you came from, you will succeed."

Myriam Márquez began her path to becoming a columnist at the Orlando (Fla.) Sentinel as an editorial writer, which gave her the opportunity to learn to write opinions.

Still a member of the paper's editorial board, Márquez said she has had a great deal of encouragement from the board head, a woman, and has benefited from the fact that its members are relatively young and more progressive.

George Ramos, on the other hand, was a Los Angeles Times metro reporter for 20 years before being offered a column.

After attacks on its building and reporters during last year's rioting, the Times "was in for a rude awakening. It had to step back and take a long look at itself," said Ramos.

One thing it learned, he continued, was that "the old rules don't work anymore. The Los Angeles Times was seen as part of the white establishment. That's why we were attacked. The Los Angeles Times suddenly realized it was seen as part of the problem."

That's when editors approached Ramos about writing a column.

Although "the paper doesn't know what it wants," Ramos said, he just tries to "talk about what it's like trying to live in the city and deal with the basics of life."

For Latino columnists, he also pointed out, "You have to be strong in your convictions. The paper may not back you up."

Moving from Chicago to Minneapolis was a bit like traveling back to the dark ages for Jennifer Juárez Robles, columnist for the Minneapolis Star-Tribune.

Her column, which started with an op-ed piece and now is on its way to becoming a full-fledged column, began because of what she saw: Minnesotans who thought they were progressive but who harbored a deep-seated racism.

"I don't think I'd be writing a column at all if I didn't live in a city with injustices," she said, noting that being a gay Latina columnist "pushes even more buttons. They get real nervous." ■E&P

Shop Talk at Thirty by Robert Neuwirth

THE JOURNALIST AND THE JOYRIDER

ALL REPORTERS, DEEP down, love good stories. I admit, I love murder. I love tragedy. I love sexy trials. I love political corruption. I love exposing the emperor's new clothes.

Working on a good story is like joyriding in a sports car after having spent your life in a sedan — you want to floor it, patch out, thrash the transmission, put the beast through its paces.

Janet Malcolm undoubtedly saw Jeffrey Masson as a good story. Her profile in the New Yorker was devastating. I am sure she heartily enjoyed every minute of it.

Last month, a jury declared that Malcolm had libeled Masson by using quotes that were not backed up by her notes or tapes. Certainly, all journalists should take note of the verdict. However, there is another concern in the case, one that has not gotten much attention — except, ironically, from Malcolm herself: The issue of bad faith.

I know all about bad faith. I have been guilty of it many times. So have most reporters I know.

I know all about bad faith. I have been guilty of it many times. So have most reporters I know.

I have paid for stories when I knew my money was being used to buy drugs the minute I left the scene. I have deliberately misled people I was interviewing — sometimes putting on a show of sympathy to get juicier quotes.

I have delayed calling people I was writing about until the last possible moment, trying to catch them off guard. I have hidden scoops from my competitors and lied to them about it.

I am not proud about any of this, but I can assure you that, in each case, I thought I was doing my job.

A few years ago, though, that all changed. An editor put me in touch with a man who had had a stroke. He talked haltingly, with a stutter. He could take 15 minutes to find one word. However, this was a big improvement. For almost a year after his stroke, he had been unable to speak at all.

I spent hours with him to make sure I had his story right: He believed the corrupt leaders of his municipal union had poisoned him.

I began to check his account. It was all circumstantial. He had been a member of a dissident union faction. The union president had been accused of corruption, but none of the other dissidents had come down with a mysterious illness, and there was no known drug that could have caused his symptoms.

As I worked, I decided to pursue a different, more compelling story — the story of a man who had made the arduous journey back from a stroke and was now trying to make sense of his illness.

I told him, over and over, that I was not going to write the story he wanted me to write. He always agreed and then returned to his central theme: This happened to him. It was fact. All I had to do was write it down the way he rehearsed it.

I realized then the difference between his goal and mine. He came to me for vindication. If I told his story, his ideas would be legitimized, his world affirmed. I came to him looking for a good story. I wanted to joyride.

Ultimately, I decided not to write about his case. No story is more important than the person it is about.

I am not saying that journalists should cover up for corrupt politicians because an article might hurt their feelings. But I do believe that if we are going to expose someone in print, we have an obligation to tell them what we think — face to face if possible. We do not let them hide in their houses and offices. So why should we be able to hide behind our pages?

I imagine many journalists will argue that a person who talks with a reporter knows the risks. But I think most people, even the most self-assured, talk to reporters because they want their side of events recorded. They want to be proved right and, if you treat your sources as friends, you owe it to them to tell them straight out what you think.

That is why it was wrong for Joe McGinniss not to tell Jeffrey MacDonald, the subject of his true-crime book Fatal Vision, that McGinniss believed MacDonald had murdered his wife and kids.

MacDonald had opened up to McGinniss, had made the author part of his life, and McGinniss had betrayed that trust, not by writing the book but by hiding his conclusions from the man he was writing about.

In her book on the McGinniss-MacDonald dispute, Malcolm says all reporters are, in essence, charlatans, "preying on people's vanity, ignorance or loneliness, gaining their trust and then betraying them without remorse."

She suggests that we should feel "some compunction about the exploitative character of the journalist-subject relationship."

Indeed we should. So should she. Malcolm spent hours talking with Masson, even putting him up at her house, as if she were his friend.

Ultimately, she concluded that Masson was, in some of her nicer words, "impudent," "complicated," "unruly," but she never told him. To Masson, it appeared that Malcolm had hooked him in and then, with no warning, vilified him. I am sure he felt it was an unprovoked attack.

Certainly, fabricating quotes is wrong. Stitching them together in a dishonest way is wrong. But I am afraid that most journalists will dismiss the Malcolm-Masson case as a simple matter of libel and lose sight of the ethical point. Being a journalist does not mean you stop being a person. ■E&P

Dennis waits for the water to boil.

Dennis Dull by Phil Young
Dennis may be dull, but he is never boring; he is simply mesmerized by the details of everyday life. A sublimely ordinary and original cartoon by Illinois cartoonist Phil Young. 6/week.

FOR THE BUSINESS PAGES

StreetWise by Herb Greenberg. With broad experience as a business reporter/columnist and as a former analyst with a Wall Street arbitrage firm, Greenberg knows the stock market inside and out. Professional traders and private investors turn to his column for information they can get nowhere else. 2/week. Keeping Up by William Hamilton. New Yorker cartoonist William Hamilton draws a special cartoon for business sections. 1/week. His latest

Bizarro by Dan Piraro
Dan Piraro's unusual cartoon panel continues to entertain millions of readers. His seventh collection, "The Best of Bizarro," has been published by Chronicle Books. 6/week plus Sunday in color.

cartoon collection, "Voodoo Economics," has been published by Chronicle Books. Business Travel Report by Jane E. Lasky. A useful and intriguing column for the domestic and international business traveler, and an invaluable resource for company travel management. 1/week.

FOOD SECTION

Cooking Around the Country by Merle Ellis. Whom do readers turn to for sound advice on preparing tastier meals and saving money? A real-life butcher turned columnist and an expert on regional American cooking. 1/week. Naturally by Sharon Cadwallader. Inventive recipes for a health-conscious nation by the author of the best-selling "Whole Earth Cookbook." Attractive illustrations by Lourdes Livingston. 1/week.

OP-ED AND COMMENTARY

As I See It by Cynthia Tucker. Cynthia Tucker is one of a select but growing number of black editorial columnists who in recent years have brought vitality and balance to the opinion pages of American newspapers. She is the editorial page editor of The Atlanta Constitution and a frequent guest on the MacNeil-Lehrer News Hour. 1/week. The Innocent Bystander by Art Hoppe. The current political and cultural scene satirized with wit, insight and compassion. 1/week. It's News to Me by Herb Caen. The world's best-known local gossip column from America's favorite city — in a special version for syndication. 1/week.

"I hate that guy. It's always 'My son the bag-boy' this, 'my daughter the receptionist,' that."

Rall by Ted Rall
Editorial page cartoonist Ted Rall represents a unique voice in political cartooning— one that speaks to a new generation of newspaper readers. His first collection of cartoons, "Waking Up in America," has been published by St. Martin's Press. 3/week

☐ Yes. I want to build my circulation and advertising base with the resources of Crain News Service. Send me more information and articles from these leading business publications:

☐ Advertising Age: A weekly look at the world of advertising and marketing. Consumer trends, new products, celebrity spokespersons and more.

☐ Automotive News: The "bible" of the automotive industry since 1925 with inside information on the products and the people that make it run.

☐ AutoWeek: America's only consumer newsweekly for car enthusiasts, featuring product evaluations, test drives and motor sport news.

☐ Business Insurance: Weekly news covering all aspects of the business, from natural disasters to employee benefits.

☐ City & State: Twice monthly features on the challenges of our cities and states and the major issues affecting them such as legalized gambling, waste disposal, economic development, municipal finance and more.

☐ Crain's Regional Business Papers: Business-oriented articles and features from Crain's four award-winning regional publications in Chicago, New York, Detroit and Cleveland.

☐ Electronic Media: A behind-the-scenes glance into the big business of broadcasting and cable television.

☐ Modern Healthcare: Business-oriented news and features about one of the nation's hottest and ever-changing topics.

☐ Pensions & Investments: A twice monthly analysis of how corporate and institutional investing influences the markets and vice versa.

☐ Plastics News: Weekly reports on environmental issues, new materials, technologies and controversial recycling programs.

Weekly Syndicated Columns:

☐ Dr. Job: A question and answer column for job-seekers and career-switchers written by business journalist Sandra Pesmen.

☐ Real Estate Matters: A residential real estate column offering basic tips to homebuyers and sellers by Ilyce Glink.

☐ James Brady: Sometimes humorous, sometimes poignant, essays by nationally renown columnist, author and broadcast personality James Brady.

Special Packages:

☐ "America at the Wheel: Celebrating 100 Years of the Automobile in America": A chronological look by Automotive News at the people, the events and the trends of the first century of the automobile, available for use September 19 or thereafter. Package includes at least 12 articles, plus photos.

☐ "94's New Cars and Trucks": A look at the year's new automotive offerings, available in early October. This Automotive News lineup of all major makes and models includes photos.

With CNS, an editor has the strength of 100.

"THE PEN IS THE TONGUE OF THE MIND..."
MIGUEL DE CERVANTES

ELEMENTS OF STYLE

The ever-ready editor never runs out of energy or good writing when CNS is running the show.

CNS toasts the newspapers who prove daily that writing well is the best revenge. We've collected the wit and wisdom of the best writers and artists in the hopes that CNS will contribute readers and revenue to your newspaper.

Fax, mail or phone us today with your requests for our complete brochure, samples. Or take the plunge and order today. All you need to do is check this form.

If we receive your response by AUGUST 15, you'll be eligible for our drawing.

Samples received by this date may win you 10 compact discs, 10 novels, or our top prize of your portrait by award-winning caricaturist Mike Thompson.

Orders received by this date may win a signed cartoon by Mike Ramirez, your caricature by Mike Thompson or a trip to San Diego to see our offices and spend a weekend on the town.

Think team Copley. It's energy you can bank on.

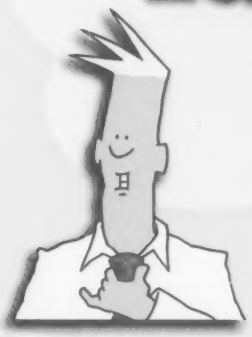
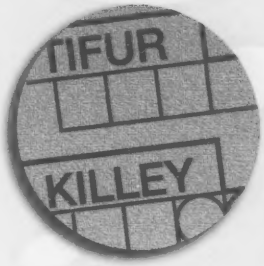
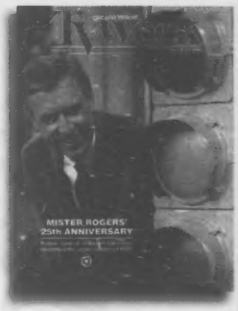
Ideas that work.







TMS
Tribune Media Services

Ideas that work.

Dear Editor:

When you look through this catalog of comics, columns and services, we hope you'll see more than just a collection of products. We hope you'll see an array of good ideas.

We're presenting ideas for tailoring your paper to the unique needs of your community. Ideas for saving newsprint without sacrificing quality. Ideas for reaching a new generation of readers through new channels.

Most of all, we're emphasizing ideas that enable your newspaper to remain vital and fresh while dealing with today's changing world.

TMS's services are aimed at a wide range of editorial and advertising needs. Whether it's TV listings, stock tables, op-ed columns, editorial cartoons or audiotex, we're proud of our reputation for editorial creativity and integrity. Our national advertising networks deliver ad revenue to newspapers that would otherwise go to other media.

As part of Tribune Company's newspaper and publishing group, we're familiar with the challenges and opportunities facing editors and publishers. We've embarked on aggressive new product development strategies to meet those needs.

We also are building the capabilities to provide integrated services for complex tasks. Our work in the area of Sunday TV supplements—where we customize listings for cable-specific zoned editions, sell national advertising and even deliver a fully paginated book tailored to our clients' specifications—points the way to the type of services we're striving to provide.

Technology, demographics and economics are rapidly changing the way newspapers do business. What hasn't changed is the need for good ideas. And at TMS, we're committed to finding them.

Sincerely,

David D. Williams
President & CEO

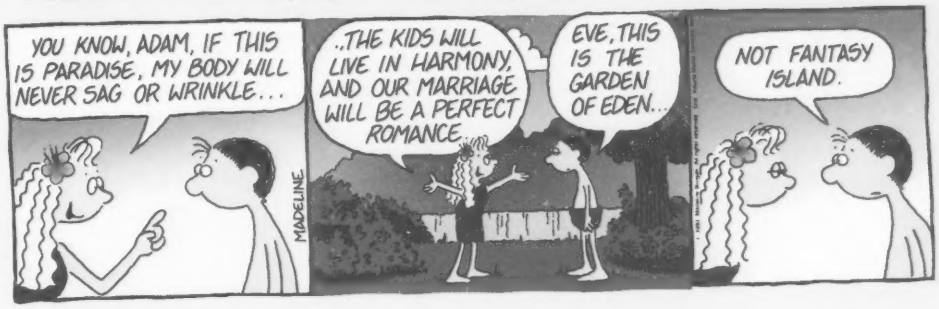
Our new comic strips are aimed at today's generation of readers, who want their comics fast, fresh and funny.

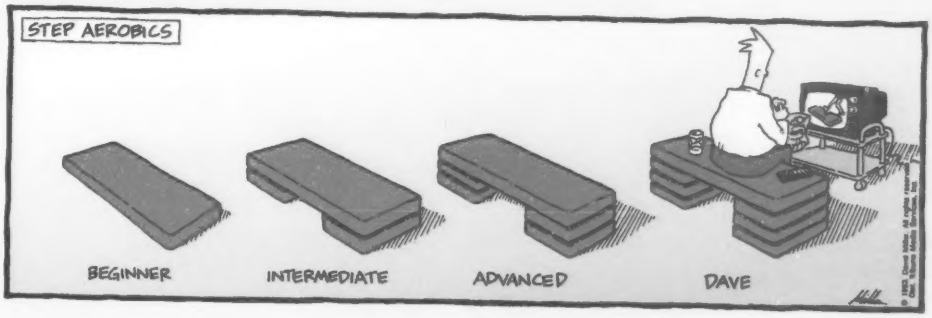
New! The First Lady by Madeline Brogan

It's all about Eve...And Adam...And a snake named Pete. TMS's newest comic takes a look at modern life through the eyes of the folks who were there at the creation. Cartoonist Madeline Brogan brings a woman's viewpoint to a strip that's funny, sassy and spiritual.

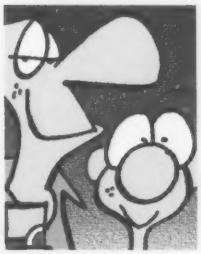


Dave by David Miller

Meet Dave, TMS's hottest new comic character and a charter member of the twenty-something generation. Dave is trying to find his way in a world that promises more than it delivers. It's the strip that'll keep Generation X turning to the comics.



Motley's Crew



by Ben Templeton and Tom Forman

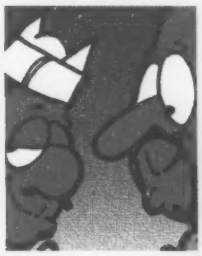
A topical, tell-it-like-it-is comic strip, Motley's Crew centers around the life and times of Average American Mike Motley. Readers will really relate to Mike's daily aggravations.

The Buckets

by Scott Stantis

A funny and often poignant look at the world in which raising a family is less of a circus and more of a zoo. It's what millions of harried moms and dads are likely to be thinking every day.

Herb & Jamaal



by Stephen Bentley

Herb & Jamaal features two African-American high school pals who return to their old neighborhood years later to run the local ice cream shop, where they dish up their own brand of good humor.

Broom-Hilda

by Russell Myers

She's bewitching. She's beguiling. She's Broom-Hilda, a green-skinned and often thick-skinned witch who casts her spell on readers everywhere with her exploits in a wacky enchanted forest.

Suburban Cowgirls

by Ed Colley and Janet Alfieri

Girlfriends Max and Darlene hit the suburban trail, where they continually search for truth, fat-free doughnuts and sensitive New Age guys—but not necessarily in that order.

Broaden the appeal of your comics pages with strips that feature diverse types of humor.

Mother Goose & Grimm by Mike Peters

Shoe by Jeff MacNelly

The cigar-smoking editor of the Treetops Tattler and his feathered friends skewer journalists, politicians and hypocrites of all persuasions. Pulitzer Prize winner MacNelly's bird's-eye view of the '90s is right on target.

Dick Tracy

by Dick Locher and Mike Kilian

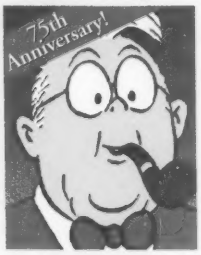
The most recognizable detective in the world, Dick Tracy is a timeless sleuth cracking timely capers. Tracy continues to captivate readers with his relentless encounters with villains.

Annie

by Leonard Starr

Annie, the most famous orphan of all time, bounds across the comics pages with her dog Sandy, as lovable as ever. Her spunky outlook on life is now reaching a new generation of children.

Gasoline Alley



by Jim Scancarelli

Four generations of readers have watched the Wallet clan grow up. Scancarelli carries on the Gasoline Alley tradition of good-natured situation comedy and stories of modern family life.

Winnie Winkle

by Frank Bolle

She's a high-powered executive working in the glamorous world of fashion, where she frequently encounters romance and intrigue. Follow Winnie as she meets life's challenges with a sense of humor.

Brenda Starr

by Ramona Fradon and Mary Schmich

Go on assignment with The Flash's fashionable, globe-trotting reporter. Readers delight in following campy newshound Brenda Starr as she finds adventure and romance.

Mister Boffo by Joe Martin

Bound & Gagged by Dana Summers

If a picture's worth a thousand words, then Bound & Gagged is an encyclopedia's worth of laughs. Renowned political cartoonist and comic strip creator Dana Summers now brings his keen eye and fresh wit to sight gags.

Catfish

by Fred Wagner and Tom Cone

Catfish, a dedicated but not too competent Indian scout, wends his way through the Wild West. His hilarious adventures have won loyal readers far and wide.

Animal Crackers

by Roger Bollen

Lyle Lion is king of a jungle filled with whimsical lions, snakes and gnus—all known for their astute observations on the human condition, not to mention their animal magnetism.

Gil Thorp

by Jack Berrill

Coach Thorp scores big points among readers who are current and former athletes. Everyone's favorite Milford High School coach gives sound advice both on and off the field.

Professor Doodle's

by Steve Sack and Craig MacIntosh

Kids go to the head of the Professor's class with fun word mazes, picture searches and drawings to complete. Younger readers enjoy the challenging puzzles and clever riddles.

Fred Basset

by Alex Graham

This floppy-eared, lovable hound's witty and wry observations on life entertain loyal readers on three continents. Fred Basset's dogged opinions about modern living add class and humor to the comics pages.

Sharp political cartoons and fresh perspectives from compelling voices can enliven op-ed and feature pages.

TMS

Articles, photos and graphics that add depth to every section of the paper are available through Knight-Ridder/Tribune.

With contributions from 40 newspapers, Knight-Ridder/Tribune Information Services offers coverage from across America and around the world—bright writing, insightful analysis, great photos and sparkling graphics.

KRT
Knight-Ridder Tribune

Information Services

Great sports and financial coverage—plus an extra-strength Washington package—round out KRT's daily domestic budget. Weekly features encompass every entertainment and lifestyle category from fashion to education, and fitness to home video.

Newspapers in smaller markets may benefit from taking KRT's Select Service, tailored for papers with less editorial space. KRT also has a new Business News service that covers financial news often missed by other wire services.

The Leader in Newspaper Graphics

Each day, Knight-Ridder/Tribune Graphics Network subscribers receive, via Macintosh and modem, graphics designed to complement articles that move on the KRT News Service. Exciting graphics are created for breaking news, sports, science, and special interest topics—in color and black-and-white.

Via PressLink, clients also have access to thousands of graphics in our archives, including maps, logos, charts and other images. They're ready for insertion in your paper—or can be enhanced by your own artists. Knight-Ridder/Tribune provides unparalleled support.

Plus Faces In The News, your best choice for entertainment, sports and political caricatures.

Newspapers that don't need daily access via modem may prefer our Infographics service, which provides a weekly mailed package on a disc or hard copy.

Great Photos Two Ways

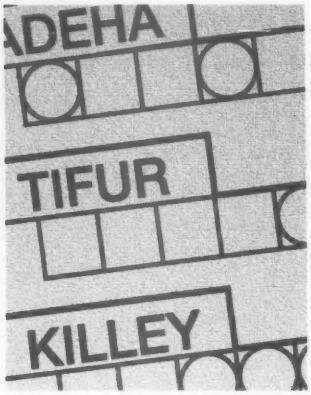
KRT Photo provides hundreds of images each week from every region of the U.S., plus hot spots around the world. They can be purchased as a complete photo wire service, or on a one-by-one basis.

Subscribers can now receive the entire satellite feed digitally via AP PhotoExpress plus have online access to our archives. Newspapers that don't subscribe to the complete service can purchase individual photos "on demand" via modem and Macintosh. You pay only for the photos you select.

Produced by Knight-Ridder and Tribune Company newspapers with contributions from The Boston Globe, The Dallas Morning News, New York Daily News, Orange County Register and The Seattle Times.

Quality features that amuse, entertain, and stimulate thought are essential for building loyal readership.

Jumble and Jumble For Kids



by Henri Arnold and Michael Argirion

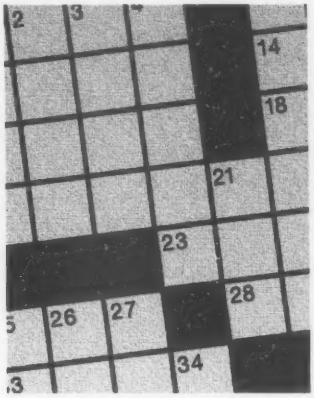
For more than 30 years, Jumble, That Scrambled Word Game, has attracted and held a loyal following with its brainteasing word puzzles. There's also a weekly version for the younger set that's perfect for your kids page.

Earth Savers

by Laura Jackson

Earth Savers presents practical tips and useful information for improving our environment. Creator Laura Jackson uses simple language and appealing graphics to suggest steps we can take in our daily lives to preserve our planet.

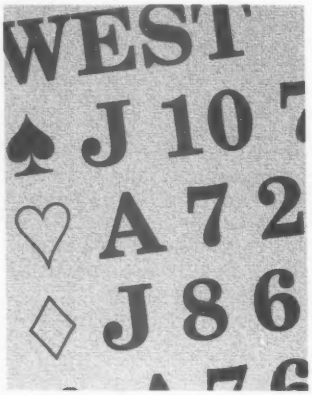
The Crosswords



by Herb Ettenson

A noted master in crafting crosswords, Ettenson offers readers challenging and clever crossword puzzles, including special TV Crosswords and Daily Commuter Crosswords. Novice and seasoned crossword addicts are hooked by these devilish puzzles.

Goren Bridge



by Omar Sharif and Tannah Hirsch

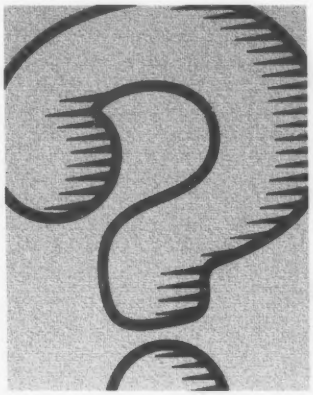
Game strategies for readers to sharpen their bridge-playing skills from a couple of world-renowned experts. Goren Bridge is also an excellent primer for those who are starting to learn about bids and trumps.

Horoscopes

by Linda C. Black

Linda Black is an astrologer who helps readers get the most out of their horoscopes. It's not just what's in the stars that matters, but what to do about it. Black's two decades of experience shine through in her thoughtful column and popular audiotex line.

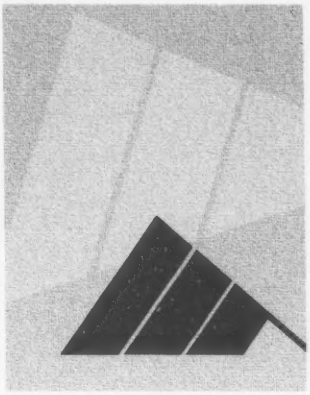
Test Your Horse Sense



by D.L. Smith

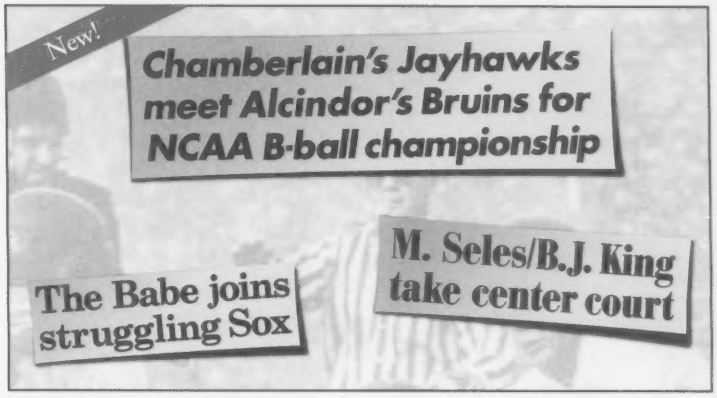
Everyone's into trivia these days. Test Your Horse Sense challenges and often stumps readers with a variety of great questions. With subjects ranging from geography and ancient history to literature and the arts, there's something for everyone.

McClatchy News Service



News, business, sports and features from McClatchy's seven major daily newspapers comprise a news and graphics service with a distinctly Western perspective. Contributions from key states in the West, plus Washington, D.C. and abroad.

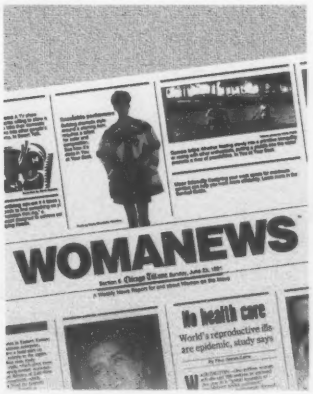
What If...?



by Bruce Herman

How would Babe Ruth hit against Nolan Ryan? Could the L.A. Lakers have won the NBA crown this year if Magic Johnson were still playing? What if Monica Seles met Billy Jean King in her prime? This unique feature uses the latest in technology to simulate great sports fantasy scenarios. Each column sets the historical stage for a great match-up and provides the statistics that yield a winner. It's the kind of feature that fans young and old will love.

The Womanews Report



Reach out to women readers with this weekly package of articles, color photos and graphics from the Chicago Tribune's acclaimed WOMANEWS section. Emphasizing the people and issues that women readers see as reflecting their own lives and interests.

Mitch Albom

One of America's most honored young sportswriters, Albom doesn't just report the score—he offers insight into players' personalities, motivations and lifestyles. A unique blend of great writing, with humor and compassion in a style that is rich on details and insight.

Sports Features

Inside Baseball
by Gordon Edes
A winning column that covers all the fast-breaking baseball news, whether it's on the field or in the front office.

Latest Line
Latest Line provides daily point spreads year-round, plus commentary to round out the statistical breakdowns. The commentary provides insight the numbers can't give.

Racing Form
The official newspaper of the National Association of State Racing Commissioners. Expert selections from "America's Turf Authority."

Superstats
by Benjamin Lee Eckstein
Superstats gives readers everything they want and need for professional and college sports picks and statistics.

Strong commentary, useful features and sound advice keep readers turning to the financial pages.

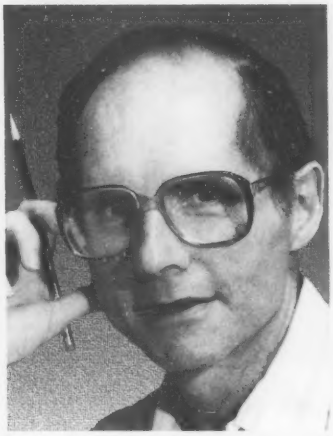
Successful Investing by Andrew Leckey

Whether your readers are sophisticated investors or are just building a nest egg, they'll profit from Leckey's sound investment strategies and business savvy. Packed with tips from industry experts, the column offers informative commentary. A question-and-answer feature boosts reader involvement.

Donoghue Strategies by William E. Donoghue

The name Donoghue is synonymous with smart fund investing. Donoghue's insightful column and useful data give readers the guidance they need to make sensible investment decisions. Donoghue also compiles the Money Fund Table, the Tax-Free Money Fund Table and the Banks vs. Money Funds chart.

The Savings Game by Humberto Cruz



He's been called everything from RoboSaver to the ultimate tightwad. Cruz puts the personal back in personal finance in a column filled with anecdotes about how he and his family have fought the temptation to spend and have boosted their willpower for saving. Readers will really respond to Cruz's useful tips and helpful hints.

The Tax Report by Julian Block

Leading tax attorney Block guides readers through today's complex tax system by interpreting tax laws and changes in legislation.

Robert Bruss

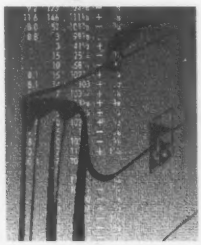
Insider Trading



This database monitors stock trading activity by officers of all publicly held companies. You select the companies you want to keep up with.

TMS

TMS Stocks is the leader in enabling newspapers to tailor their financial tables to their specific needs.

TMS Stocks

When it comes to upgrading financial tables, more newspapers are switching to TMS Stocks.

TMS Stocks is the leader in providing customized services tailored to each newspaper's individual needs. While other stocks suppliers are now trying to imitate our innovative service, we're rolling out to more and more papers that trust TMS experience.

The New York Times | Newsday | Chicago Tribune | The Seattle T
Star Tribune | THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION | The Atlanta Journal | Post
Des Moines Register | The Orlando Sentinel | Daily News | LEXINGTO

We've helped many newspapers save space on stocks and options tables while improving reader appeal. Listings can be arranged by region, industry, performance, or any other category a newspaper requests. Tables can be graphically enhanced with arrows, underlining or bold face to highlight significant stock performers. Listings from a variety of stock exchanges can be compiled into one report.

MORNINGSTAR Our alliance with Morningstar can bring your readers useful and comprehensive information on mutual fund performance—from the most trusted independent source in the mutual fund industry.

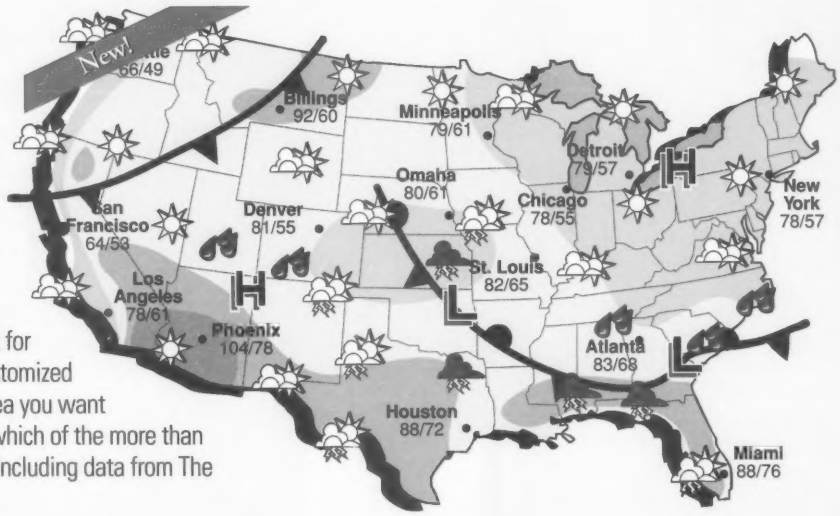
Our team of professionals provides the expertise you need to redesign financial coverage and the ongoing support to make it work. We'll work with virtually any front-end system or provide output to a Macintosh. That flexibility—plus TMS's responsive service—has earned the trust of editors and publishers at newspapers large and small.

TMS STOCKS

Innovative services that target the needs of specific audiences are vital elements of today's newspapers.

The Weather Channel Weather Page

Introducing newspaper weather from the best name in weather! Your readers know and trust The Weather Channel for accurate and easy-to-understand weather data. Now you can put The Weather Channel to work for your newspaper with a totally customized package. You decide the exact area you want your regional maps to cover and which of the more than 25 features you want included—including data from The Weather Channel on 2,000 cities.



US Express

US/EXPRESS is the answer to your Total Market Coverage (TMC) needs. Created by The Orlando Sentinel, it's brightly written, tightly edited and designed for maximum reader appeal. We provide the package in an electronic format that you can easily customize to your paper's specific requirements. Special features offer profitable opportunities that meet advertiser needs. Flexible and cost-effective, US/EXPRESS will help make your paper's TMC product a welcome addition to any household.

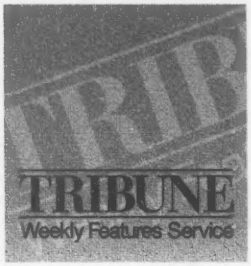
Spots

This pooch has proven to be hot stuff in the Sunday comics section of the Chicago Tribune—and now he's just about ready to go national. Spots brings his special brand of fun and stimulation to the comics pages for the youngest group of readers. There's no better way to get the families of young children actively involved in building the reading habit. And the possibilities for using the Spots package to build advertising and database revenue make this a feature you can't afford to ignore.

College Press Service

The nation's largest syndicated service devoted to covering the college scene. Timely reports about news and trends from around the nation make this a valuable resource for any college paper—and a great way for the media to keep up with what's happening on campus. It's a bountiful source of articles, cartoons and features—as well as for contemporary story ideas that can be given a local twist by your staff. There's also a special service for high schools that helps build student editing skills.

Weekly Features Service



Weeklies across America are discovering the quality and value of this package especially designed to meet the needs of non-daily newspapers. Subscribers get an abundance of articles, features, comics, cartoons, games, puzzles and graphics that offer something for just about every reader interest. The weekly package is filled with brightly written columns that emphasize practical advice and timely news about entertainment and celebrities. It's a service that adds creativity and professionalism to any weekly.

TMS

More than ever, updated TV listings are a major reason people turn to newspapers. Readers expect the best.

TMS TV Listings

TMS TV Listings has earned the reputation as the first choice for newspapers that want to give their readers the most accurate and readable TV schedules available.

Now, thanks to a state-of-the-art upgrade of our TV listings production system, TMS can make customized logs and grids available in a wider variety of formats.

Advanced technology now makes TMS's superior listings available to more newspapers.

TMS TV Listings

We have the capabilities to provide our listings in the formats you need. Select styles that provide the right look for your newspaper and add the special breakouts that help readers find their favorite programs. We'll also provide a selection of first-rate articles. We'll deliver our listings direct to your typesetting system or to a Macintosh.

We're the experts at producing zoned TV supplements tailored to match local cable systems. We're also the leaders in delivering fully paginated TV supplements—the ideal way to improve quality and reduce costs.

We're proud of our client list of major newspapers. We're investing in the technology needed to keep up with the changing world of television. We're committed to being the best.

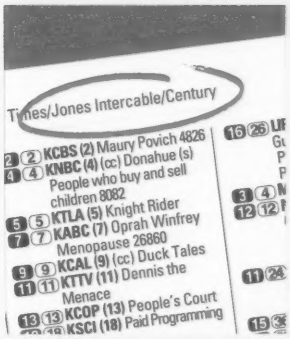
Multiple versions



TMS TV Listings provides grids and logs in formats designed to meet the needs of individual newspapers. Choose from a wide array of features and options to develop the TV pages that will best serve your readers. Whatever format you select, TMS delivers listings with unsurpassed accuracy.

All syndicates send bills; we also send checks. Our ad networks bring revenue to papers from other media.

Advertising Networks

More viewers turn to newspapers for television information than any other print source—twice as many as TV Guide and the cable guides combined. Our advertising networks insure that newspapers get the advertising dollars they deserve.

Under the umbrella of TMS TV Promotion, our three ad networks allow broadcasters and cable programmers to use newspapers to deliver a promotional message right when viewers are deciding what to watch.

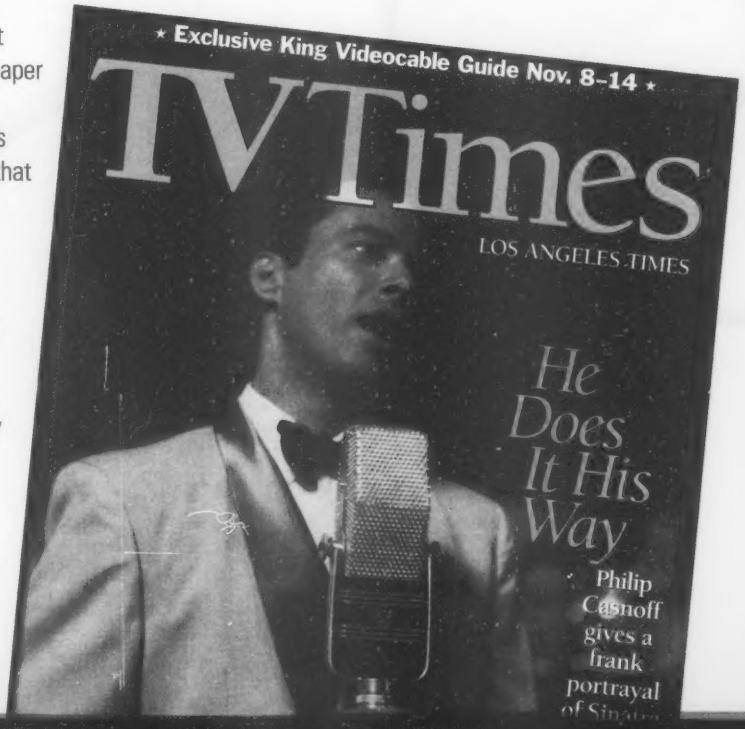
TV Log provides three powerful lines of promotional copy embedded in the listings in 117 markets covering 87% of the nation. Advertisers can buy just one market—or the whole network with a combined circulation of 80 million copies.

The TV Week Network provides an efficient way to buy display ads in the top 40 newspaper Sunday TV Books as well as supplemental market add-on packages. TV Week provides the convenience, ease and cost-efficiency that make newspaper TV magazines work for programmers.

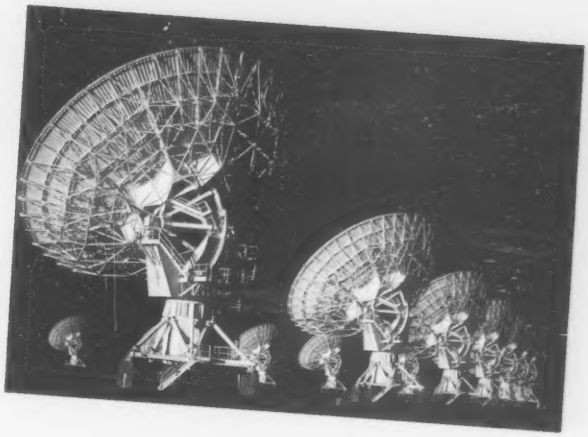
Our newest service, the TV Premium Grid Network offers an exclusive opportunity for ad messages to appear in the TV grids of major market newspapers. Because there's only one ad per grid, it's a format that really stands out from the crowd.

Together or separately, our ad networks give newspapers the edge in getting ad dollars from TV programmers.



New digital technologies help newspapers improve and expand service to readers.

Picture Network International

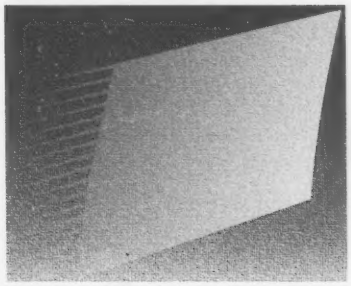


Imagine a desktop computer system that allows you to archive your own photos and search, view and purchase images from the world's great photo sources with search commands that use everyday language.

That's what's behind a family of new products that enables newspapers and other media to use innovative new digital technology to archive, purchase, and sell photographs and other images.

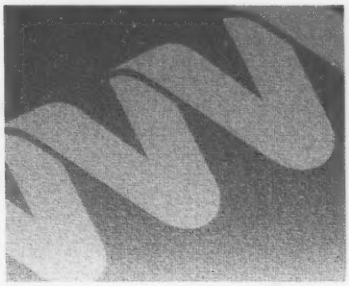
Photo editors will be able to search for images in a digital data base using plain English descriptions of subjects and concepts instead of predefined, limited keywords. Users can then retrieve and browse through images before selecting and buying them. Newspapers will also have access to the technology for their own internal use.

TMS Fax



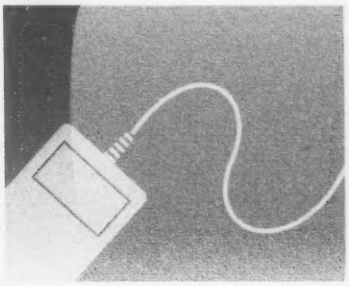
"Fax it to me." That phrase is becoming more and more popular—and smart newspapers have begun to take note of the trend. Newspapers of all sizes are now beginning to experiment with delivering additional information to readers via fax. Although still a small market, fax represents an important technology for the future. TMS is developing a line of products that makes it easier for newspapers to get into the fax business. Our aim is to provide pre-formatted documents, ready for faxing to readers who have special information needs.

Voice News Network



TMS offers audiotex coverage that lets your newsroom get the most out of your paper's audiotex system. Our Voice News Network energizes your news and sports pages with true interactivity, offering round-the-clock updates on key stories. Innovations like VNN's unique link with the Knight-Ridder/Tribune News Service put the power of audiotex in your editor's hands. The Tribune tradition of excellence in news and features assures news quality, credibility and integrity.

Online Services



No syndicate has more experience in creating computerized programming for video formats than TMS. We make many of our most popular features available to online services, and our TMS News Desk specializes in customizing news briefs for emerging media. We work with online providers to match our content to their specific needs. Our experience with designing, creating and maintaining information in interactive formats gives TMS the edge in helping newspapers enter the up-and-coming world of online services.

COMMENTARY

Donna Britt Commentary that is personal, human and moving. Britt connects with readers across the political spectrum. A bright new star on newspaper op-ed pages. Twice weekly.

David S. Broder Political insight and relentless grass-roots reporting make Broder indispensable. With the young new administration, his sage advice is more important than ever. Pulitzer winner 1973. Twice weekly.

Lou Cannon There is no better expert on Rodney King and the issues of California, which has one-ninth of the nation's electorate. The problems facing California hold lessons for the rest of the country and Cannon is the one to watch those trends. Once a week.

Richard Cohen A gutsy writer who takes stands on difficult questions, both political and social. Liberal on many issues, but entirely unpredictable. Writes on top of the news, often as it breaks. Twice weekly, with timely extra columns.

Ellen Goodman Her latest book collection of columns, "Value Judgments," nicely sums up her work. Every issue is viewed with a strong grounding in fundamental values. Goodman addresses tough subjects, ones for which there are no easy answers. Pulitzer winner 1980. Twice weekly.

Jim Hoagland No one is better at explaining complex problems such as Bosnia and issues involving America's relationship with its allies. With sources across the globe, his columns have always been must-reading at the White House. Pulitzer winner in 1971 and 1991. Twice weekly.

Charles Krauthammer Incisive commentary on national and foreign issues. Known for his graceful writing and distinctive style. Prescient in his observations of presidential performance. Pulitzer winner 1987. Once a week.

Colman McCarthy Liberal to the core, McCarthy makes eloquent arguments on behalf of causes he believes in. He opposes war, abortion and capital punishment. He stands up for the rights of the common man. He offers balance to op-ed pages. Twice weekly.

Mossprints* by Geoffrey Moss His distinctive drawings dramatize the news as no other artist can. He adds visual focus to news and editorial pages, putting into drawings what it takes thousands of words to say. Ten very timely works of art each month.

Neal Peirce Travels America in search of new ideas and community programs that improve the lives of citizens. The column spreads those ideas far and wide. Grass-roots reporting at its best. Once a week.

William Raspberry More than just commentary, Raspberry offers solutions to problems that threaten our society. A strong believer in the family structure and its positive effects on young people. Twice weekly.

Edwin M. Yoder Jr.

For 20 Years... The Best In The Business

▶ It was 1973, ten years after Kennedy's assassination. The Vietnam War was grinding down and Watergate began threatening Richard Nixon's presidency. In October, Nixon accused the press of "outrageous, vicious, distorted reporting." During this supercharged year, Washington Post Executive Editor Ben Bradlee created the Writers Group to represent Pulitzer-winner David Broder and other Post writers.

▶ September 4, 1973, the Writers Group opened for business with Bill Dickinson as editorial director and one feature—the Broder column. Broder had 100 papers by year-end.

COMMENTARY

Dana Summers One of the more conservative cartoonists, which sets him apart from most others in the business. Editorial cartoonist of The Orlando Sentinel. Four drawings a week.

Washingtoon* by Mark Alan Stamaty Unorthodox cartoon style, which is a favorite among young readers. His searing wit skewers Washington figures, especially Congressman Bob Forehead. One cartoon a week.

George F. Will Perhaps the most influential op-ed columnist since Lippmann. Can crystalize public opinion with a single column. He is conservative, but with an inquisitive mind that can change. Millions of readers wouldn't think of missing George Will. Pulitzer winner 1977. Twice weekly.

Edwin M. Yoder Jr. A great admirer of Bill Clinton, yet doesn't hesitate to criticize the president. A professor at Washington and Lee University and an expert on the Supreme Court and the law, Yoder's knowledge of history puts issues into perspective. Pulitzer winner at The Washington Star 1979. Twice weekly.

June 1975, WG had added George Will, Jane Bryant Quinn, Geoffrey Moss, Hobart Rowen and Book World, but the nation was in recession and due to a prolonged strike by Canadian paper workers, newsprint was in short supply. Dickinson, in an internal memo, likened himself to the guy in Las Vegas who prays, "Please God, let me break even. I need the money."

BUSINESS & ECONOMICS

Computer Report The Washington Post's T.R. Reid and ABC News' Brit Hume review the latest PC products and cover the computer industry in reader-friendly fashion. Once a week.

Robert Kuttner Expert analysis on the nation's economic problems, especially health-care issues. Makes arcane economic policy understandable for the layman. Has great sources in the Clinton administration. Once a week.

The Nation's Housing* by Kenneth R. Harney A real estate column for home owners, who make up two-thirds of newspaper readership, according to the latest research. Readers by the thousands write in thanking Harney for information that saved them money or helped them understand real estate transactions. Once a week.

Jane Bryant Quinn Without question, the nation's No. 1 personal finance writer. Her engaging, colloquial style demystifies increasingly complex issues for today's consumer. Quinn has the kind of common sense and skepticism, as USA Today puts it, "that keeps fools and their money from being parted." Twice weekly.

Hobart Rowen First winner of the Professional Achievement Award from the Society of Business Editors and Writers (1993). Also first winner of the Loeb Foundation's Lifetime Achievement Award (1992). The best at analyzing the politics of economics. Twice weekly.

GENERAL FEATURES

American Health Magazine Timely, topical and hip, American Health is the most authoritative magazine in its field. Weekly excerpts include a 900-word main story on a vast array of topics and a set of wide-ranging news briefs. Twice weekly.

Thomas Boswell Covers most major sports as a columnist for The Washington Post. A master essayist who writes twice weekly with extras during the baseball playoffs, the Super Bowl, the Masters and other major sports events. All columns for immediate release.

Cheap Thrills Cuisine* by Bill Lombardo and Thach Bui A new recipe comic strip for food pages and feature sections. Chef Peppi whips up dishes that are creative, yet quick and fun. He can enliven any food section. Once a week. In color and black-and-white.

Food for Thought* by Jeanne Goldberg, R.D., Ph.D. Sound advice on healthy eating and nutrition from dietary expert Jeanne Goldberg of Tufts University. Two features a week include a topical essay and a Q-and-A. Twice weekly.

On Aging Advice on pertinent issues for our aging population. Written by experts at UCLA and the University of Southern California's Long Term Care Gerontology Center. Once a week.

Tom Shales The No. 1 TV critic today. With pungent style and devastating wit, Shales measures TV programming through the prism of basic American values. Often writes about cultural trends, such as the increase of TV violence during sweeps weeks. Pulitzer winner 1988. Twice weekly, plus specials on major TV news events.

Washington Post Book World The complete Book World offered by wire each Tuesday, five days before publication. An additional package of five daily reviews moves on Wednesdays. Reviewers include Pulitzer-winners Jonathan Yardley and Michael Dirda. Twice a week.

Washington Post Magazine* Crossword Puzzle Top constructors produce an interesting and topical puzzle each week. Each puzzle has a theme suggested by its title. One puzzle a week.

Why Things Are* by Joel Achenbach Answers all sorts of weird and interesting questions such as why we can't grow dinosaurs from scraps of DNA, or why our socks don't stay up. Creative, offbeat and hilarious, this Washington Post feature is loved by young readers and those, young or old, with a zany sense of humor. Once a week, with illustrations by Richard Thompson.

▶ January 1976, WG had nearly 500 features in newspapers and, with Ellen Goodman starting in 1976 and William Raspberry coming aboard the following year, the number of sales doubled by January 1978. In his first five years, Dickinson had launched a dozen features and spearheaded the publication of more than 15 books. The foundation was in place for making the Writers Group a significant force in newspaper syndication.

▶ December 8, 1980, WG launched "Bloom County" by Berkeley Breathed. It was snapped up by 300 newspapers in its first two years.

▶ January 1982, WG had 21 contributors and despite another national recession, had 2,000 features in newspapers.

COMICS

Non Sequitur by Wiley Voted, in its first year, "Comic Strip of the Year 1992" by the National Cartoonists Society. Non Sequitur lives up to its name by offering the unexpected every day. Finds laugh-out-loud humor in real-life and not-so-real situations. Single panels in strip format. Daily and Sunday.

Outland by Berkeley Breathed Opus and Bill the Cat, two American icons, delight millions of readers every week. Interest in Outland is fueled by hot-selling children's books that feature the Outland and Bloom County characters. Bloom County won the Pulitzer in 1987. Sunday release.

Pickles by Brian Crane Earl and Opal Pickles may be a retired couple, but they're part of a modern family. Their lives are never dull because they share their home with their daughter Sylvia, who is a divorced working mother, their precocious grandson Nelson, and their sly feline Muffin and dense canine Roscoe. Daily and Sunday.

▶ During the 1980s, the Writers Group flourished. The number of contributors grew to 32 by 1988 and the WG had 3,600 features in daily newspapers. "Bloom County" was in 900 newspapers in July 1988 and was doing big business with book collections, T-shirts and plush toys.

▶ May 1, 1989, Berkeley Breathed, saying "a good comic strip is no more eternal than a ripe melon," announced he would discontinue "Bloom County" that August. "Bloom County" had 1,016 subscribers, plus 250 colleges. In September, he launched Sunday-only "Outland," which was picked up by 300 newspapers.

Editor & Publisher

Editor & Publisher covers more syndication news than any other publication. David Astor has been the editor of the "Syndicates/News Services" section of E&P for 10 years. During this time he has covered syndicate mergers, lawsuits, controversies and conducted numerous interviews with cartoonists and columnists. David's dedication brings syndication happenings to you weekly. So when you want to stay on top of syndicates and news services read Editor & Publisher.

To receive your own copy of Editor & Publisher, fill out one of the convenient bind-in cards in this directory and mail it to E&P, Circulation Department 11 West 19th Street, New York, NY 10011-4234.

Peanuts A global winner for more than 40 years. Garfield Eat, drink and be lazy in honor of Garfield's 15th Birthday! Dilbert A mild-mannered engineer and his domineering little dog—the dynamic duo of the '90s. Rose is Rose The loving side of family humor. Jump Start Working hard and keeping love alive. 9 Chickweed Lane NEW! Intergenerational humor featuring a pre-teen, her divorced mom and ornery grandma. Betty A feisty female and her male admirers: her husband and son. Marmaduke Great Dane! Great fun! Drabble Fumbling Through Life: 101. Nancy Irrepressible and irresistible. Guy Stuff They're young, they're single, they're hip—and they have dead-end jobs. Francie A divorced, working mom. Glamorous, it's not!

SCRIPPS HOWARD NEWS SERVICE

The most readable, best-edited supplemental news service available. It features a wide range of well-written articles on essential topics including finance, health, science, entertainment, sports, plus news and commentary. Graphics, editorial cartoons and seasonal specials round out the service.

The 21 Scripps Howard newspapers and our growing list of contributors continue to enrich the service:

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

The Milwaukee Journal

San Francisco Examiner

St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Star Tribune: Newspaper of the Twin Cities

The (Toledo) Blade

The Providence Journal

St. Petersburg Times

The Observer of London

Congressional Quarterly

Deutsche Presse Agentur

With about 80 stories daily—500 to 800 words each—by respected journalists, SHNS is the only supplemental news service your newspaper will need.

VCR Plus+®

Life should be so simple!

VCR Plus+ one-step programming and the VCR PlusCode™ numbers have become the world standard for easy, hassle-free VCR programming.

PlusCode numbers are an essential part of television listings worldwide, including North America, Japan, Korea, France, the United Kingdom, Puerto Rico and New Zealand.

VCR Plus+ is everywhere! The VCR Plus+ technology is being built into every make of VCR. And VCR Plus+ units are currently distributed by more than 22,000 retail outlets worldwide.

Make the VCR Plus+ success story part of your newspaper's success. In addition to the PlusCode numbers, we offer newspapers exciting VCR Plus+ contests and promotions (we even provide the prizes) to help increase awareness of the VCR Plus+ benefits to your readers. We also keep our newspaper clients up to date through VCR Plus+ newsletters and faxes.

VCR Plus+ one-step programming. Our success is contagious!

UNITED MEDIA AUDIOTEX SERVICES

Proven Success. From Newspaper People.

Offering a range of services designed to enhance the various sections of a newspaper while generating incremental revenue.

UNITED MEDIA'S PERSONALLY SPEAKING

PERSONALLY SPEAKING provides newspapers with not only a revenue generating product, but also one that helps protect, solidify and grow your news and information franchise. Our goal is your success.

With more than 50 daily newspapers offering PERSONALLY SPEAKING, we have a successful track record. Our service includes proven marketing programs and a turn-key, hands-free operation with live ad-taking 24-hours-a-day.

PERSONALLY SPEAKING was designed with many unique features to benefit both advertisers and callers. As a result, United Media can boast of the highest average call volume in the voice personals business.

DIAL SPORTS

Sports fans are steady callers to this 24-hour hotline. DIAL SPORTS provides scores as they happen, plus injury reports, odds, previews and updates of all major sporting events. And we provide monthly in-paper promotional ads to help alert your readers to special DIAL SPORTS coverage.

ASTRO-TONE

An extension of your astrology column, providing detailed horoscopes, lovescopes, monthly forecasts and lucky numbers.

Dear Editor:

News about the economy appears to be better than it has during the past few years, and Creators Syndicate is excited about the future. Our commitment is to represent only the best columns, comics and editorial cartoons and offer the most courteous, cheerful and efficient service possible. Enthusiasm makes the difference today, and we strive each day to give positive, enthusiastic service. We are truly grateful to the thousands of newspapers in the United States and internationally that are helping Creators Syndicate become the biggest and best in the world. We thank you. Any success we achieve depends on the newspaper industry's continued success and growth. The history of newspapers is characterized by a spirit of enterprise, accomplishment and creativity. The future of the industry, including direct interactive communication with readers and advertisers, looks more exciting than ever. The possibilities for future growth are unlimited.

Sincerely,

Richard S. Newcombe

In South Africa, a Life Not Lost

By Paul Taylor
Washington Post Foreign Service

EVATON, South Africa—On my sixth day as a foreign correspondent, somebody tried to kill me.

My rude initiation into this line of work came as I was driving with two South African journalists—one white, one black—through the black townships south of Johannesburg to cover the biggest general strike in this nation's history.

I was on a side mission as well: to cadge as many tips as I could about how a white reporter who had just landed in this beautiful, damned and violent country, and who'd never worked abroad before, should do business in risky terrain.

We spent the morning in sprawling Soweto, South Africa's biggest city, and Orange Farm, a nearby squatter camp, talking to blacks about the strike and strike-related violence. Over several hours and in more than a dozen interviews, we encountered not a trace of hostility.

A little farther south in Evaton—a township situated a few miles from the scenes of some of South Africa's most infamous political massacres—Sharpeville in 1961, Sebokens in 1984 and 1991, Biopaton this year (1992)—we hit trouble.

As our compact rental car came to a stop at an intersection, it was cut off by another car full of "tsotsies"—hooligans who prey on township residents with little to fear from the police, who are despised in the townships.

Four young black men leaped out of the car, hauled us out of ours, and demanded our keys and money. I could see that at least one had a gun. We explained we were journalists and made it abundantly clear that under the circumstances we were eager to oblige. The tsotsie who yanked me from the passenger side seemed reasonable enough, so before I handed him my money, I began the formality of showing him my press card, which also was in my wallet.

But I never finished the transaction. On the other side of the car, a much rougher set of tsotsies had hauled out the driver, Phillip van Niekerk, who is political editor of The Weekly Mail, South Africa's leading investigative paper. One clubbed him over the head; another ripped off his jacket. One shouted: "Get out of the townships, you white (expletive)." Then he shot Phillip in the head.

The gunfire distracted my tsotsie, which gave me a chance to walk around the car and try to help Phillip, whose face was covered with blood. I got to within feet of Phillip and the gunman. He looked up at me; I at him. Nothing was said. Then I felt an enormous punch inside my chest.

The 9mm bullet bore a hole through the humerus bone in my left shoulder without breaking it, smashed a rib in my back, then ricocheted harmlessly toward my breastbone without breaking it, rather than toward my heart or lungs. Everything the bullet did to my body, nature is going to undo.

Phillip's luck was even more miraculous. He had been shot at point-blank range. The bullet entered his head just behind the right ear and exited just in front of his left ear. Astoundingly, and by scant millimeters, it managed to miss both his spine and the artery to his brain.

In the seconds after the shooting, there was one more dangerous moment to come—far more dangerous, I've since learned, than I realized at the time. Here we were, a couple of white guys, lying bleeding in a suddenly deserted intersection in the middle of a black township in a region seething with suspicion and hatred.

This is a corner of the globe where life sometimes seems scandalously cheap, where blacks get axed, speared, machine-gunned and "necklaced" to death, almost always by other blacks, for the sin of commuting to work, or attending a funeral, or having some money, or not taking part in a rent strike, or being a member of the wrong gang, faction, tribe or political organization. And it is an area in which white skin usually connotes cop, which in turn connotes repression, torture, terror, massacre—to say nothing of three centuries of unpleasant history that predated formal imposition of apartheid.

Our black colleague, Hubert Matlou, a former reporter-intern at The Weekly Mail, had escaped unharmed and was nowhere in sight. Once it was clear the shooting had stopped, a crowd began to gather—not, it seemed, a friendly crowd. Phillip was screaming, "My God, I'm going to bleed to death. Somebody help." The first wave of onlookers took a puzzled look at us and walked away.

I wound up showing my press card to someone who I learned afterward was an Evaton man named Felix Gabanakgosi, a 39-year-old computer technician in a nearby industrial area. He phoned me at the hospital later and explained he had been off work the day of the general strike, drinking at a local tavern, when he heard the shots.

"When I got outside, there were some in the crowd who were saying, 'Let's just finish them off,'" Gabanakgosi said. "But I told the people, look, they're human beings. At first I was afraid they might burn my house for saying this, but the crowd turned very quickly." Once everyone was on our side, the crowd commandeered the next car that came by and helped us into the back seat.

The scary thing about the attack on us wasn't that it was political; it was that it wasn't political. In all the years of the anti-apartheid struggle, only one journalist in South Africa lost his life covering the story. Now, when an average of 80 people are being killed every week in the townships, everyone who lives there, or has a job that takes him or her there, is frightened. Journalists included.

The townships are pretty dangerous places. But they are also places where the Felix Gabanakgosis of this world live. That's the lesson I learned the first week on the job; the one for which I am eternally grateful; and the one that provides hope that this haunted nation might yet find its way to a better tomorrow.

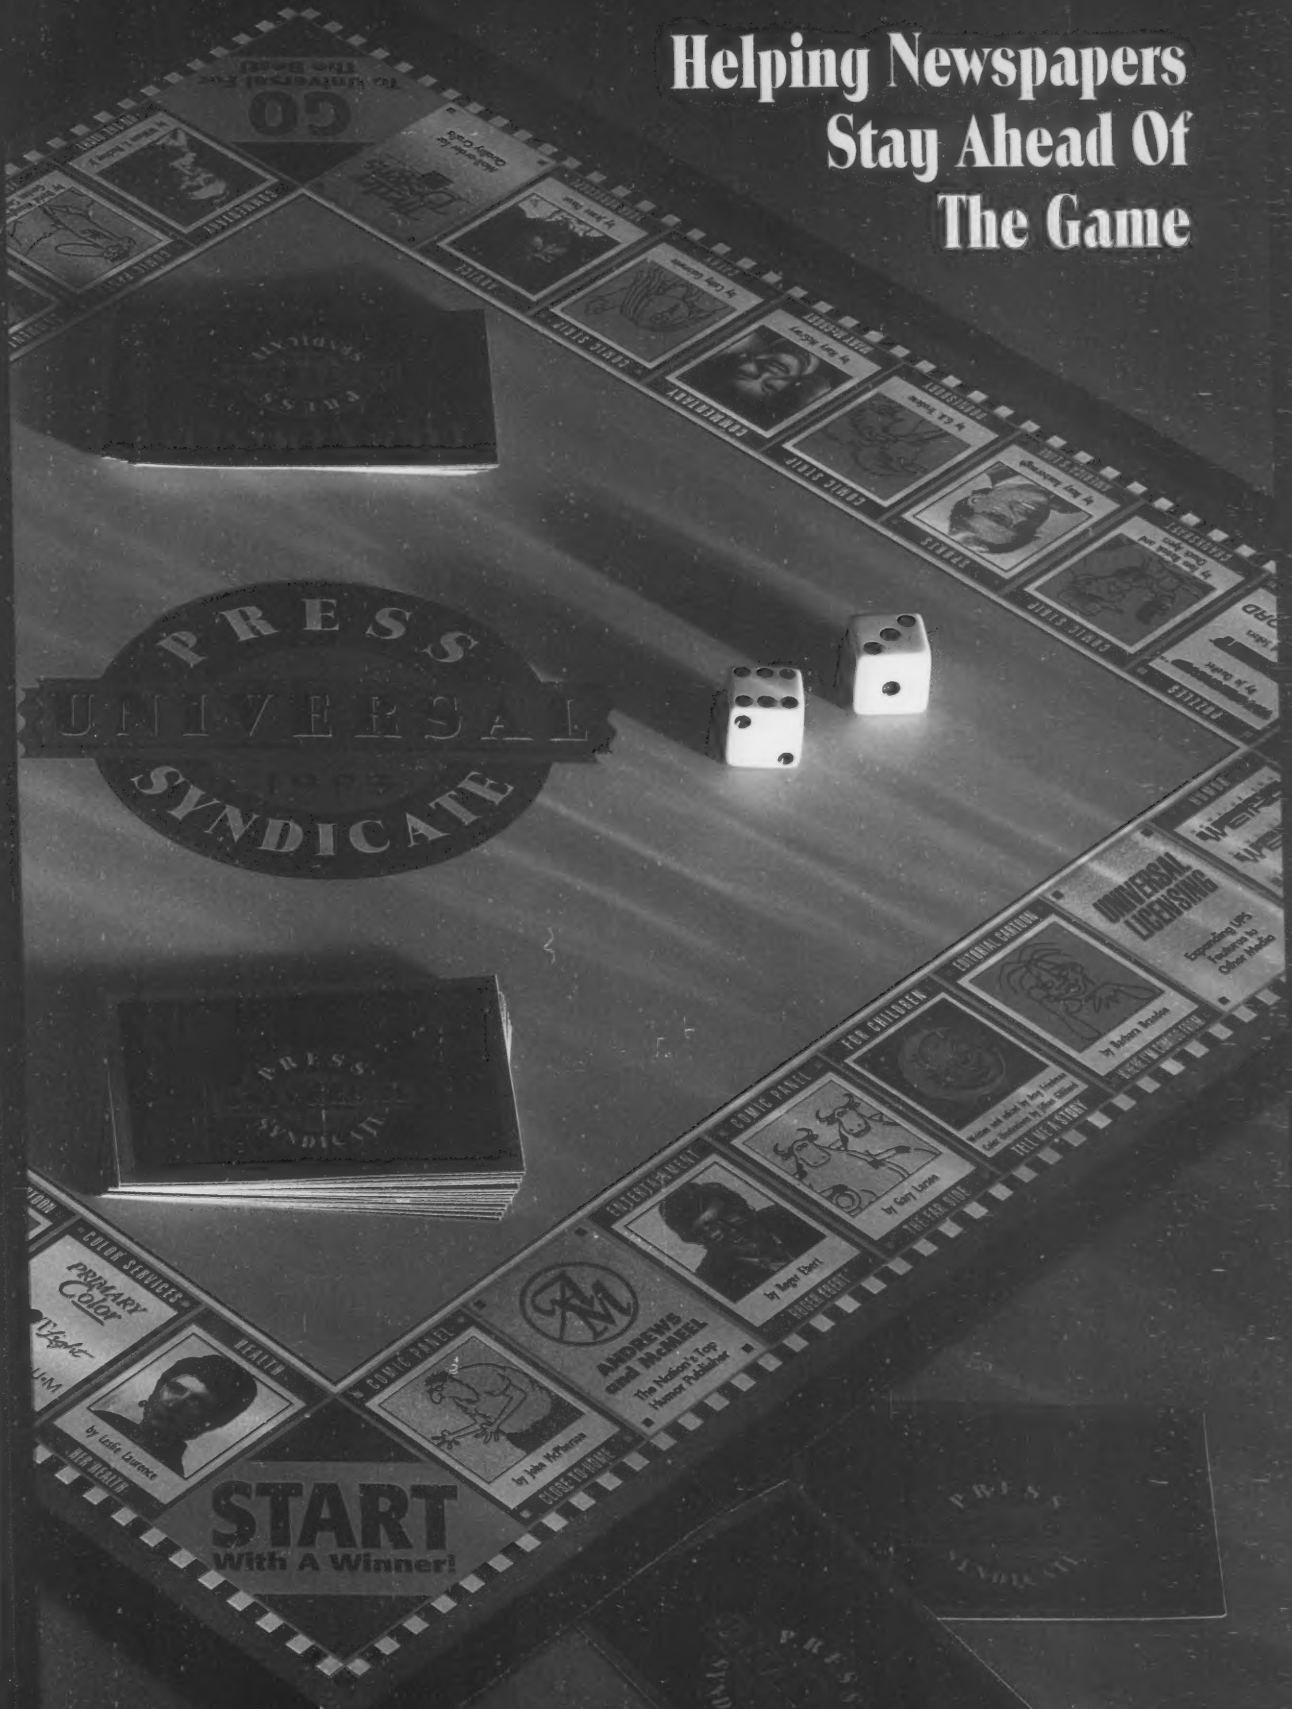
Helping Newspapers Stay Ahead Of The Game



Dear Editor:

A primary goal at Universal Press Syndicate is to help newspapers stay ahead of the game. The first way we do that is by offering what we believe are the best features available: unparalleled comic and text features and vibrant color services for your readers, as outlined in the following pages.

To further increase the value of the features you have chosen for your newspaper, Universal has the unique ability to take this creativity into other channels. These outlets reach the young consumer who may not be a reader—yet—but will look to your newspaper after being introduced to the feature in another medium. Features like Calvin and Hobbes, strengthened in readership by 18 million books in print from our publishing arm, Andrews and McMeel; or The Far Side, enhanced by millions of books and more than 4 million calendars sold each year through A&M. Likewise, You Can With Beakman and Jax, the comic feature on which the critically-acclaimed "Beakman's World" television series is based (a joint venture between Universal Belo and Columbia Pictures Television), receives additional exposure—and will receive even more—when the show is added to CBS' Saturday morning lineup this fall.

These syndicate-related properties must start out as outstanding features by exceptional creators, for outstanding newspapers like yours. Like Cathy Guisewite, winner of the Reuben Award for Outstanding Cartoonist of the Year for her Cathy comic strip. Guisewite is only the second woman (the first being For Better or For Worse creator Lynn Johnston) to win this prestigious award. Or Betty Debnam, winner of two EdPress Awards this year for "excellence in educational journalism" in The Mini Page. And Garry Wills, winner of a Pulitzer Prize in 1993.

Taking it one step further, Universal can also reinforce the value of your newspaper by extending the life of your attention-grabbing stories in book form through our newspaper book publishing program. America: What Went Wrong?, which began as a series in THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER from Pulitzer Prize-winning journalists Don Barlett and Jim Steele, will soon top 500,000 copies in print. The Big One: Hurricane Andrew, by the staff of THE MIAMI HERALD, has sold nearly 150,000 copies. And How 'Bout Them Cowboys! The Return of America's Team from THE DALLAS MORNING NEWS arrived on bookshelves within weeks of the Super Bowl. Likewise, the upcoming publication of The Day J.F.K. Died—Thirty Years Later: The Event That Changed a Generation from THE DALLAS MORNING NEWS and The Pope—John Paul II: The North American Journey of His Holiness from THE ROCKY MOUNTAIN NEWS promise to be of tremendous interest. And there are many more titles of local, regional, national and international interest planned. Through our books and other merchandising programs (calendars, mugs, greeting cards, etc.) that reach consumers in other ways, Universal can help newspapers cultivate new sources of revenue as no other syndicate can.

Your readers can look to Universal for the best newspaper features available. And editors and publishers can confidently look to Universal for much, much more—for help in staying ahead of the game.

Sincerely,

John P. McMeel, President

Cards stacked in your favor through revenue-enhancing dimensions offered by Universal Press Syndicate

ANDREWS AND McMEEL

The nation's top humor publisher, featuring the best-selling collections of UPS features, including Dear Abby, and comic collections such as Calvin and Hobbes, Cathy, Crankshaft, Curious Avenue, Doonesbury, The Far Side, For Better or For Worse, FoxTrot, Overboard, Real Life Adventures and Ziggy. Offers rebate programs to reduce feature billing.

A&M is also the publisher of consumer reference books (including Roger Ebert's Video Companion and The Universal Almanac) and has had remarkable success with books published in cooperation with some of the most well-respected newspapers in the country. Books introduced in the last year include: the best-selling America: What Went Wrong? as well as Making Medicine, Making Money and Kids' Talk with Linda Harris from THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER; The Big One: Hurricane Andrew and Hurricanes: How to Prepare and Recover (THE MIAMI HERALD); How 'Bout Them Cowboys! The Return of America's Team (DALLAS MORNING NEWS); and Back to Glory: The Amazing Story of Alabama's 1992 Championship Season (MOBILE PRESS REGISTER).

Upcoming titles include: Free Ride: The Tax-Exempt Economy and Hard Choices: Health Care at What Cost? (THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER); The Pope—John Paul II: The North American Journey of His Holiness (ROCKY MOUNTAIN NEWS); and The Day J.F.K. Died—Thirty Years Later: The Event That Changed a Generation (DALLAS MORNING NEWS).

OZ

Newspaper readers can keep their favorite comic characters close to them with cards, calendars, mugs and T-shirts produced by this gift and stationery division of Andrews and McMeel. Offers premium programs to newspapers. Features some of the hottest properties available in the market today, including The Far Side, the Dales, FoxTrot, Seinfeld, Mary Engelbreit, Ren and Stimpy™, and Saturday Night Live.

TREXLER CRAFTS

Mail-order operation for quality handcraft kits and instructions, made available through the popular Pat's Pointers weekly handcrafting column by Pat Trexler. Provides rebate incentives.

UNIVERSAL BELO PRODUCTIONS

This division enhances the appeal of syndicated features through exposure in television programming. "Beakman's World," a joint venture with Universal Belo and Columbia Pictures Television, premiered in the fall of 1992 on 225 stations and The Learning Channel, and will air on Saturday mornings on CBS for the 1993-94 television season. Other live and animated television programs based on UPS syndicated features are currently in development.

UNIVERSAL LICENSING

Division of UPS sales that offers UPS features to other media, reinforcing the popularity of the features and making them more recognizable and appealing to your readers.

UNIMEDIA

Devoted to direct marketing and to publishing newsletters, magazines, catalogs and newspaper inserts. Returning revenues to newspapers through UniFone's caller-paid 900 numbers that add value to America's Line and Jeane Dixon's Horoscope.

ONE SHOTS AND SERIES

UPS offers timely, readable book excerpts, magazine reprints and original pieces through its High Impact one-shot and series service.

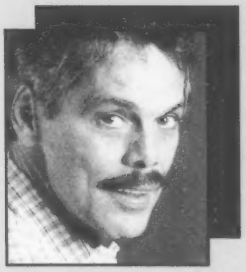
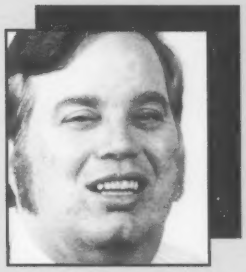
The New York Times 1993-1994

NEWS SERVICE / SYNDICATE



Join your colleagues from coast to coast

who turn to us for the best in news, features, graphics and photos.



Edited to fit your needs

NEWS & FEATURES

More than 600 media points receive the world-class coverage of The New York Times and excellent partner publications via The New York Times News Service.

The News Service offers exclusive stories, strong local coverage, a variety of features and more than 25 columnists — many of them Pulitzer Prize-winners — all in one package.

The News Service now includes selected stories from a broad range of newspapers reflecting every region of the nation.

In addition to The New York Times, the News Service includes stories each day from Cox News Service (18 papers including the Atlanta Journal & Constitution), Fort Worth Star-Telegram, Hearst News Service, The Kansas City Star, Los Angeles Daily News, San Francisco Chronicle, Seattle Post-Intelligencer, the 23 dailies in nine states of The New York Times Regional Newspaper Group, as well as state-specific Washington, D.C., coverage from States News Service.

"The NYT News Service is invaluable for a paper our size, without its own national and international staff. It lets us match —and often beat—nearby metropolitan papers on big stories."
— Marcia McQuern
president & executive editor
The Press-Enterprise
Riverside County, Calif.

GRAPHICS

More than 30 maps and informational graphics a day, seven days a week, are delivered to subscribers' Macintosh computers.

From the widely acclaimed business graphics package to maps from our contributing newspapers reflecting local perspective, The New York Times Graphics Service provides art for every section of a newspaper.

As a bonus to subscribers, we offer our archive on the Presslink database of more than 5,000 images from business logos to maps. There is no extra charge.

"Thank you for moving your excellent stories in time for us to use. Keep them coming."
— Larry Rose,
executive editor
Corpus Christi (Texas)
Caller-Times

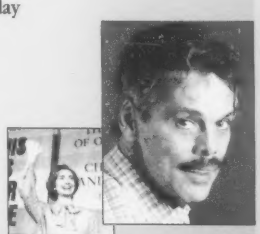
"The NYT Graphics Service fulfills our every expectation every day. We couldn't do without it."
— Bernard Bennell
senior artist
The Globe and Mail, Toronto

PHOTOS

We take advantage of the latest in digital photo technology to offer packages that accommodate every newspaper's need and budget.

Clients also receive science illustrations from The New York Times and sketches accompanying home-improvement copy.

Subscribers may select our full service of 20 pictures a day delivered straight to their AP LeafDesk or other electronic darkroom, or our five-pictures-a-day feature package, also delivered electronically. Or clients may choose only the photos they want from our photo retrieval system, Wieck Photo Database.



"Your new AP Photo Express delivery is a great way to get your high-quality images into our newsroom, saving us time and money. Thanks for making us look so good!"
— Gary M. Williams
director of photo technology
El Nuevo Dia, San Juan, Puerto Rico

A MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

Thousands of editors around the world—we're delighted to highlight several in this brochure—use our news stories, features, columns, photos and graphics.

Our goal is simple—give clients the best features and services to help them better inform, better entertain and grow profitably in the 1990s.

Complementing our strong veterans like PageUp, The Economist, Financial Times, Mikhail Gorbachev's column and the Fairchild fashion package are a number of new features this year—GeoFacts, a full-color graphic to boost geography and science awareness; Inside Trek, which focuses on the "Star Trek" phenomenon; Mr. Info, guru of government giveaways; a new news service from The Independent of London and new columns by Carlos Fuentes and MTV's twentysomething Tabitha Soren.

On top of all this, we've continued improving The New York Times News Service to make it easier to use—more short stories, more optional cuts, special keywords to find stories for special pages, plus three new contributing partners: the Kansas City Star, Seattle Post-Intelligencer and the Hearst News Service.

Best regards,

John C. Brewer

Do-it-yourself or Not...?
by Gene and Katie Hamilton

A pragmatic approach to home improvement projects that answers:

Should you do-it-yourself or hire a contractor?

Compare the DIY Cost with the Contractor Cost and learn what skills and tools are needed.

Weekly in the Chicago Tribune, Philadelphia Daily News, Plain Dealer and others since 1987

Dysfunctional Memoirs + Readers = Laughs

Q: Who profits? (Financially)
1. Newspaper running column? (Definitely)
2. Me! (I hope)
3. Whoever I have to pay to run my column.
4. All above

A: (y)Upside down to hide answer.

What do the nation's top self-syndicated writers have in common? They're experts in their fields, don't use salesmen to negotiate fees and, of course, they're distributed computer-to-computer by ComLinx.

When you're designing your newspaper, go to the source ...

Ethics & Religion — Weekly
America's second largest self-syndicated column covers religious and ethical issues such as: How to save marriages, cut teen pregnancy or teach ethics to kids.
Call Mike McManus: 301 469-5870

MicroMagic — Weekly
Norma Schonwetter's tested recipes show readers a great-tasting way to a healthy heart, and with the speed of a microwave oven. A published author on nutritional cooking.
Call Norma Schonwetter: 313 547-7056

Beyond the Beltway — Weekly
Bill Collins, the former mayor of Norwalk, Conn., has seen government from the inside and out, and shares his insights on issues critical to every community in America.
Call Bill Collins: 203 846-1109

NewsUSA — Free Monthly
Every month the editors of NewsUSA prepare packages of consumer tips, environmental news, business briefs and more. Augment your news and special sections.
Call NewsUSA: 800 355-9500

The Real Estate Record — Weekly
Give your readers a friend in the real estate business. Jody Record, a working real estate agent and journalist, coaches buyers and sellers through the housing process.
Call Jody Record: 603 436-3261

Living with a Disability — Q&A Weekly
Disability diversity is changing the American landscape. Dianne Piastro, disabled for 20 years, shares experiences valuable to both disabled and non-disabled readers.

INTRODUCING

FOR THE FIRST TIME EVER

A new section to the Editor & Publisher International YearBook "Who's Where" is a 200 plus page listing of all daily and weekly newspaper personnel by their last name, with a cross reference of the paper for which they work, their title and telephone number.

ALSO NEW FOR 1993

Is the addition of state maps at the beginning of each state's listing in section I and at the beginning of Canada's listing in section III. These maps will show you the location of each daily newspaper and the Metropolitan Statistical Areas for each state.

FOR AS LITTLE AS $90

All of the new and exciting features to the 1993 YearBook – along with more than 125,000 data changes which were made to the YearBook in 1993 – can be yours for as little as $90 per book. To have the most accurate information about the newspaper industry at your fingertips, use the convenient bind-in card in this issue or call Editor & Publisher at 212-675-4380.

9 CHICKWEED LANE™ by Brooke

The new address for intergenerational comedy.

Meet 12-year-old Edda, her mom Juliette and her grandmother Gran—three generations under one roof. Their street address may be the same, but they're miles apart on the road of life. Their daily conflicts, laughter and miscommunications deliver the comedy for this beautifully drawn new comic strip.

Cartoonist Brooke McEldowney describes 9 Chickweed Lane™ this way:

"It's about everybody's shared experience: childhood, adolescence, adulthood; yearning to grow up, fighting to grow up, wondering if you'll at least grow up before your children do."

Multi-generational. Multi-layered. Multi-laughs.

New Jersey's largest newspaper grows more colorful

It's not a black and white world out there. That's why The Star-Ledger takes its commitment to high quality process color in its editorial and advertising so seriously. And The Star-Ledger is continuing to expand this commitment having come on line with a second satellite offset printing plant.

When you produce a newspaper that's alive with well organized information, award winning coverage, and high quality color, readers and advertisers respond. That's why The Star-Ledger is the leading newspaper in New Jersey – greater than the next three New Jersey papers combined.

For clear colorful coverage, New Jersey looks to The Star Ledger.
